Mr. BAILEY submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress not heretofore reported.

THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that Senate document No. 444, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, being the report of the Second International Peace Conference held at The Hague from June 15 to October 18, 1907, be reprinted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL FOREST IN MINNESOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4186) creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes.

The amendments were, on page 5, line 7, after "quarter," to insert "quarter;" page 8, line 2, after "the," to insert "said;" page 8, line 6, after "commission," to insert "of three persons;" page 9, line 12, strike out "an agent" and insert "a representative who shall serve without compensation;" page 10, line 16, to strike out "May" and insert "June;" page 12, line 1, after "sales," to insert "made by the Secretary of the Interior as;" page 12, line 19, after "appropriated," to insert "and no commissioner shall be paid for more than ten days' service;" to strike out all of section 8 and insert:

Sec. 8. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any of the land in said reservations excluded from the reserve created by this act, or to dispose of said land, except as provided by the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and an act of June 27, 1902, entitled "An act to amend an act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," or the provisions of this act; or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of the said lands and the timber thereon, and to dispose of the proceeds thereof, as provided in said acts, only when received from the sale of the timber and the lands, as herein provided.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act amending the act of January 14, 1889, and acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, I give notice that on Thursday morning next, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I will address the Senate on Senate bill 6463, to create a financial commission.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 21844. An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment, which was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. DEPEW, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 21890. An act providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission, with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, several days ago I gave notice that at the close of the morning business to-day I would ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill 6206, and if it is proper to do so, I will ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate. It will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. Under Rule IX, a bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to file at this time. I reserve the privilege.

Mr. McLAURIN. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that the bill may be now considered.

Mr. BULKELEY. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I am not expecting to have any particular consideration of the bill to-day. I want to make some remarks in explanation of the notice I gave that I would call it up to-day for consideration.

Mr. McLAURIN. So it is called up for the purpose of enabling the Senator to make some remarks on it?

Mr. BULKELEY. That is the purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President, on the 13th of May I gave notice that I would this morning, after the conclusion of the morning business, ask the Senate to give consideration to this bill, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs adversely, there being another bill in regard to the same subject reported adversely from the committee. Senators will recall that a few days since by a very large vote the consideration of one of these bills was postponed until December next. I am embarrassed somewhat this morning by the fact that the Senator on whose motion one of the bills was postponed, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], is still absent from the Chamber through indisposition, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who I understand desires to speak on this question, is still detained from the Chamber by reasons well known to almost every Senator.

I contented myself the other day by simply voting against the postponement of the bill then under consideration, Senate bill 5729. It seemed to me that the course suggested and taken was one that would not commend itself to the people of the country, and the more I have given it consideration and seen it commented upon in the press of the country the more I have become convinced, in view of all the circumstances and the investigations that have gone on for the past twelve or eighteen months in regard to this matter, that, without criticising the action of the Senate, the proper course for this body to pursue was to take some action at the present session.

I would call to the attention of the Senate one or two facts. The Committee on Military Affairs of this body have had this subject under investigation for about eighteen months. They have given the matter most careful consideration, and on some things in making their report they entirely agree. The entire committee agree on at least one point, which I will call to the attention of the Senate. On page 24 of the report nine members of the committee found as follows:

That the testimony fails to identify the particular soldier or soldiers who participated in the shooting affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

And on page 29 of the report the other four members of the committee found the same condition, as follows:

1. The testimony wholly fails to identify the particular individuals, or any of them, who participated in the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

So on this fact of an absolute inability to identify any individual connected with the affray the entire Committee on Military Affairs are agreed, as found in this report.

Eight members of the committee agree on another finding, which I will also read. The finding by four members of the committee is found on page 26, as follows:

In the present case, however, it would seem but justice to restore to all the innocent men of these companies the rights and privileges which had accrued to them by reason of their previous service in the Army, and of which they will be permanently deprived unless their former status shall be restored by legislation, for the reason that under existing statutes the time has already expired in which they could have re-enlisted and secured the benefits of their prior service had they been honorably discharged because of the expiration of their several terms of enlistment.

And on page 29 four other members of the committee found the same condition, in the following language:

Whereas the testimony shows beyond a reasonable doubt that whatever may be the fact as to who did the shooting, many of the men so discharged were innocent of any offense in connection therewith; therefore it is, in our opinion, the duty of Congress to provide by appropriate legislation for the correction of their record and for their re-enlistment and reinstatement in the Army, and for the restoration to them of all the rights of which they have been deprived, and we so recommend.

The President, who issued the original order discharging the troops, or by whose order the troops were discharged by their commanding officer, states in his message to Congress under date of March 11:

The Senate committee intrusted with the work has now completed its investigation, and finds that the facts upon which my order of discharge of November 9, 1906, was based are substantiated by the evidence. The testimony secured by the committee is therefore now available, and I desire to revive the order of December 12, 1906, and to have it carried out in whatever shape may be necessary to achieve the purpose therein set forth; any additional evidence being taken which may be of aid in the ascertainment of the truth. The time limit during which it was possible to reinstate any individual soldier in accordance with the terms of this order has, however, expired. I therefore recommend the passage of a law extending this time limit, so far as the soldiers concerned are affected, until a year after the passage of the law.

So Senators will see that even the President, who issued the original order of discharge, has perhaps become convinced that there are men in the battalion who were dismissed by his order who are entitled to some consideration, for I can see no other reason why the President in his message to Congress should recommend the extension for a year of the consideration of the restoration of any of the men.

Eight members of the committee, after hearing all the evidence produced in this matter, have practically joined with the President in recommending legislation of the character indicated, and, if I am correctly informed, the other members of the Committee on Military Affairs were not in favor of any legislation whatever. If I am incorrect in that, I should like to be corrected, but that is my understanding.

Mr. President, it seems to me there is every reason why Congress at this session ought to have taken up and disposed of this matter. Justice delayed unnecessarily long loses all its efficiency and vindication postponed loses all its charms. After all the investigations, which have been thorough and have probed the matter to the deepest extent, it seems to me that the Senate is as well prepared to-day as it ever will be to pass upon this matter and to finally dispose of it. I can see myself no question even of expediency, or whatever you may call it, that stands in the way of justice to many innocent men being rendered without further delay.

I do not like to ask at this time, and I shall not this morning ask that the bill be taken up for consideration. If the session should be prolonged to another week and the Senator from Ohio, on whose motion the matter was put over, should return to the Senate, and if the Senator from Massachusetts should be here in time to discuss the measure as he proposes, I shall take the liberty at a later day to ask the Senate to give the matter further consideration.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from Kentucky can bring up his motion after we go to the Calendar, and I suggest that he will defer it until that time.

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator suggests that I wait until the Calendar is called before moving to take up the bill from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. NELSON. When we are on the Calendar the Senator can make the motion then. I suggest to him that he postpone it until the bill is reached on the Calendar.

Mr. PAYNTER. I would prefer to make the motion now, but I will wait.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. MCCREARY. I did not hear the motion of the Senator from Minnesota. Was it that we should proceed to the consideration of bills under Rule VIII?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes; under Rule VIII.

Mr. MCCREARY. That embraces bills not objected to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It embraces bills not objected to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman and Tucker acts," was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over. It would lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

The joint resolution (S. R. 93) relating to the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The bill (S. 915) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in buildings, ships, navy-yards, and parks and other premises owned or used by the United States Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

COURTS IN KENTUCKY.

The bill (H. R. 14382) to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCCREARY. I object to the consideration of the bill. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Kentucky objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. PAYNTER. The bill has been called on the Calendar regularly, and I desire to have it considered. I ask that it be considered notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to suggest that he can move to take it up?

Mr. PAYNTER. I move to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President, this is an important bill. I ask the junior Senator from Kentucky to please state to the Senate what he relies on to justify the passage of the bill. I am opposed to action upon it now, and I have been requested by the United States circuit judge and the United States district attorney to say that there is no necessity for another court in the eastern district of Kentucky. Perhaps the junior Senator can enlighten us on this point. I would be glad to have him state to the Senate what he relies upon to justify the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNTER. I understand the motion to take up the bill for consideration is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will take pleasure in giving the Senate the reasons why the bill ought to become a law when it reaches the stage where it can be debated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I could not exactly catch the meaning of the bill by hearing it read, and I should very much like to have the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], who has moved its consideration, explain the bill.

Mr. PAYNTER. It is a bill proposing to establish a United States court at Jackson, Ky.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky give his reasons for wanting to establish another United States circuit court in Kentucky. We have nine places now where United States courts are held. The United States circuit judge for the eastern district of Kentucky has written me that he does not think another United States court is necessary in the eastern district of that State, and the United States district attorney for the same district has also written me that he does not think another court is necessary in that district. I should like, therefore, to have the junior Senator from Kentucky show that the establishment of such a court is necessary. I should like to hear from him on that point. I desire to do what is right regarding these courts in Kentucky, and that is the reason I desire to hear from my colleague on that subject.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, to have the opportunity to give the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] and also the Senate the reasons why this bill should become a law. Jackson is the county seat of Breathitt County. It is situated 86 miles from the city of Richmond, the city in which my colleague resides, at which place there is a Federal court. It is situated 185 miles from the city of Covington, where a Federal court is held; it is situated about 200 miles from the city of Catlettsburg, in which a Federal court is held, and it is situated by rail about 125 miles from London, where the Federal court is held in the eastern district of Kentucky.

My colleague says that there are nine courts in the State of Kentucky. That may be true, but there are five courts in the eastern district, in which the town of Jackson is situated. Jackson is situated in the mountains of Kentucky. It is reached by two railroads; it is a point at which a great deal of business is transacted; it is a growing town; it has an electric-light plant; it has waterworks in the course of construction, and it is building fine streets. In fact, the town is growing as much or more than any other town in the mountains of Kentucky.

There are people living in that section of the country who own small farms. Unfortunately, owing to the system of land titles in Kentucky, their titles are clouded by the old Virginia grants and by grants from the State of Kentucky. Those lands are becoming valuable. They are bought by people who live outside the State of Kentucky, who go to the Federal court and seek to recover from those people their little homes. Although the people there may be successful in the litigation, it exhausts their means to successfully oppose such actions. I say, Mr. President, it is not right to compel those people to travel long distances with their attorneys and witnesses in order to have their causes tried. That is true, notwithstanding the geographical situation of Richmond.

It has been suggested that it would take business away from Richmond to establish this court at Jackson. If it does—and that is given as a reason for the opposition to this bill—it is the greatest reason I could give why this bill should become a law, because if Jackson is situated so that a court there would serve twelve or fifteen counties, then it is a proper location for a Federal court.

Although a court at Jackson might reduce the business of the court at Richmond or at other courts that is not a good reason for forcing the people of that section of the State who have business in a Federal court to travel, at great expense, to distant points to have their cases tried. Courts should be as convenient as possible for the trial of causes. Litigants should be afforded an opportunity to get their cases disposed of promptly and at a reasonable cost.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky pardon an interruption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PAYNTER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. As I understand, this bill does not create a new district, but simply changes the place of holding court?

Mr. PAYNTER. It does not change the place of holding court, but creates an additional court. That is all.

Mr. CLAPP. An additional court? There was some apprehension here that possibly it created an additional district.

Mr. PAYNTER. No; that is not true. In that section of Kentucky there are many prosecutions for violations of the internal-revenue laws. I hold in my hand a statement, for the correctness of which I do not vouch, but it is made by a Member of Congress from Kentucky who has given the matter some attention. He says the bill will be a benefit to the Government, viewing it from the point of expense. I quote from his letter as follows:

One of the chief classes of Federal business that would be done at this court would be the trial of persons for violation of the internal-revenue laws. The counties of Magoffin, Knott, Letcher, Perry, and Breathitt would average at least 500 prisoners and witnesses annually in cases of this character, who now travel from 150 to 200 miles to the other courts. This would involve an average traveling expense of about $12 for each person, or something like $30,000 per annum for this item alone. The remaining counties named above would average from 200 to 300 prisoners and witnesses a year, who would travel an average of about 100 miles, making from $12,000 to $14,000 for traveling expenses from these counties, or a total from the territory that will be accommodated of about $44,000 per annum for traveling expenses.

Mr. BURKETT. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky, inasmuch as I asked him to explain the bill, that his explanation has gone far enough to entirely satisfy me in regard to it, and so far as I am concerned he does not need to occupy more of the time of the Senate. I want to say to the Senator also that I think the plan, as I learn it now to be, is a good one. Several of us had the impression, not being able to hear the reading of the bill, that it created an additional district.

Mr. PAYNTER. No.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that when we took up the matter of an additional judge for the State in which I live—the State of Nebraska—we created several additional places for holding court. I am with him on the proposition that he makes that the closer one can get the Federal court to the people, within proper limits of course, the better it is. Understanding his bill from his explanation, which I could not from the reading of it, because of the noise that was in the Chamber, I am in hearty accord with his idea.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, if I thought I had been so fortunate as to convince other Senators as I have the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], I would stop at this point, but my colleague [Mr. McCREARY] has stated that the judge in this district is opposed to the bill. I do not know whether his mind has undergone a change or not, but I take it for granted that the judge, like all of us, prefers ease and comfort, and that he would very much prefer to hold court at the other places now prescribed by law and transact business there, if possible, without this journey. But that is not the purpose of this bill. Its purpose is to afford easy access to those people who, unfortunately, are brought into court, whether under criminal process of the Federal Government or brought there by reason of civil action. I know Judge Cochran is not only an able, but an industrious judge, and he will cheerfully hold the court at Jackson.

Judge Cochran, in a letter to Mr. LANGLEY, the Representative in the other House from that district, says:

MAYSVILLE, KY., December 24, 1907.

HON. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 16th instant, inclosing the draft of a bill providing for the establishment of a United States court at Jackson, in my district. I have no objections to its passage nor any changes in its provisions to suggest.

Very truly, yours,

A. M. J. COCHRAN.

I should like in this connection, and then I shall conclude my remarks, to read part of a statement made by a circuit judge in that district—not the Federal judge, but the State judge, one of his predecessors—and of a number of other citizens who live at Jackson. The statement is as follows:

This is the terminus of the Lexington and Eastern Railroad and the distributing point for the counties of Breathitt, Perry, Knott, and a portion of Leslie and a portion of Letcher. It is also the junction of the Lexington and Eastern and the Ohio and Kentucky Railway Company. It is situated just below the confluence of the north fork of the Kentucky River and Quicksand Creek and South Quicksand Creek. All the coal and timber on these creeks and other tributaries, including Troublesome Creek and Lost Creek and embracing several hundred thousand acres of the very finest coal and timber lands in Kentucky.

We have also an electric-light plant, built and in operation, and also waterworks now in course of preparation, together with an ice plant. We have good macadamized streets in a large portion of the town, costing in the neighborhood of $10,000, and stone and concrete sidewalks in a large part of the town and the remaining portion of the town will be required to put down this kind of sidewalks in the near future. It is a live, energetic town, and real estate is increasing rapidly in prices and within the last five years has more than doubled in prices. It is also the county seat of Breathitt County, which is one of the largest counties in area and contains perhaps more undeveloped wealth than any county in Kentucky, and is situated in the heart of the coal and timber region in Kentucky.

We know that large numbers of people from this county and the counties surrounding it and immediately adjoining it go to attend the Federal courts at Richmond and at Frankfort and at Covington and at even Catlettsburg and at London almost every term. We believe that at least 90 per cent of the criminal business at Richmond comes from this immediate section of the country, and at least 60 per cent of the civil business at Richmond and a large per cent of the other cases come from this immediate section of the country, and the nearest one of these courts to us by rail is a distance of 88 miles—being that of Richmond. Frankfort is a distance of 133 miles, Covington 185 miles, Catlettsburg 165 miles, and London, by rail, about 125 miles. We notice that your report stated that it is only 52 miles to Richmond. This is a mistake. We do not believe you can reach Richmond in that distance by an air course. All the business above mentioned as coming from this section would be accommodated by a court at Jackson and would, in our judgment, save the litigants and the Government annually almost enough to erect a Government building here at this point. The defendants in most of these cases from this part of the country are poor people and mountaineers who in a large number of instances are unable to attend court and travel the distance and pay the necessary expense to make their legitimate defense, while this would be obviated with a court at Jackson and would enable our people to meet the foreign corporations and nonresidents on an equal footing. We verily believe that there is more business for the Federal court coming from Breathitt and the counties adjacent thereto than in any one court within the eastern district of Kentucky, and believe there would be at least twice the business here in court as at London or at Richmond.

I think I ought to correct that; it is only 86 miles—

Mr. President, I think I have given sufficient reasons why this bill should become a law. It passed the House of Representatives unanimously and was unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. I believe that it is a meritorious measure and that the Senate should pass it.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, when the bill to establish a United States court at Jackson, in Breathitt County, Ky., was introduced in the House of Representatives, I wrote to the United States circuit judge of the eastern district of Kentucky and to the United States district attorney, and asked them if another court was necessary in that district. I have the reply of both those gentlemen. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] read a statement from the United States circuit judge dated December 24, 1907. I have here his statement, dated Maysville, Ky., February 30, 1908, which is as follows:

UNITED STATES COURTS FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY,
Maysville, Ky., February 13, 1908.

Hon. JAMES B. MCCREARY.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your telegram just received. You ask whether I think another place to hold court in my district is necessary. To answer you candidly I must say that I do not think that it is. I should, however, mention that Mr. LANGLEY, before he introduced his bill providing for Jackson as an additional place, inquired of me whether I would oppose it, and I told him that I would not, and in response to a letter inclosed a copy of his bill I wrote him that I had no objection and no suggestions to make in regard thereto. As I view it I do not think I should inject my personality into the matter, but leave it for Congress to determine without reference to my particular wishes. I feel, however, that when inquired of by Congress or any Member thereof as to any particular facts affecting the question or my opinion in regard thereto I should give a candid answer. Hence I respond to your query as I do.

Respectfully,

A. M. J. COCHRAN.

I have here also a telegram from the United States district attorney on the same subject, in which he says:

COVINGTON, KY., February 17, 1908.

Senator J. B. MCCREARY,
Washington, D. C.:

With five places to hold court in this district, no necessity for court at Jackson.

TINSLEY, United States Attorney.

Now, Mr. President, it does seem that the United States district judge and the United States district attorney should know whether another court is necessary in that district, and both of them say that they do not think it is needed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the judge or the district attorney say anything about the expense that will be saved to the Government?

Mr. MCCREARY. I am coming to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood from the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] that the expense saved to the Government would be about $50,000 a year. If so, that is very important.

Mr. MCCREARY. There will be but little expense saved and if this bill is passed an appropriation of $100,000 to erect a public building at Jackson will be asked. Here is also a letter from the United States district attorney:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY,
Covington, February 17, 1908.

Hon. J. B. MCCREARY,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Following my telegram of to-day and in answer to yours of February 15, will say that we already have as many terms and places for holding court in the eastern district of Kentucky as are necessary to transact the public business. There is no public necessity for a term of court to be held at Jackson, Ky., or anywhere else in the district. We now have five places for holding court, and there is no public demand for another in my opinion.

With highest personal regards,
Respectfully,

J. H. TINSLEY,
United States Attorney.

The Attorney-General was called upon for a statement, and in his answer he said that "the opinion of the United States district judge should have much weight," and that opinion is against the court being established at Jackson.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Kentucky has not presented to you a solitary petition asking for this court. This matter has been under consideration nearly three months, and I have never received a letter or a petition asking for the establishment of this court at Jackson, in Breathitt County, Ky. No lawyer and no citizen has ever asked me to support this measure. At the bottom of this measure is simply a desire to get $100,000 to erect a United States public building at Jackson. That is the secret of the introduction of this bill.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Kentucky yield to the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MCCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator has stated the position of the judge and the United States district attorney as to this matter, and the Senator says that no petitions have been presented. I will ask the Senator to speak about the people who do favor it. Has he any doubt that people of the counties of Perry, Knott, Letcher, Leslie, Owsley, Wolfe, Johnson, Magoffin, Menifee, Morgan, and perhaps of some other counties, would like to have this court?

Mr. MCCREARY. This bill has been pending for three months; it has been discussed a good deal, and I have had a number of letters and two petitions protesting against the establishment of the court, but I have never received a letter or petition outside of the county of Breathitt or outside of the town of Jackson saying that this court was needed.

Now, Mr. President, it is proper, in order that we may understand exactly the situation, that I should state how long the eastern district of Kentucky has been established. For one hundred years we only had one district in Kentucky, but in 1901 the State was divided into two districts, known as the "eastern" and "western" districts. I live in the eastern district. I live almost in the center of it. I live within 50 miles of Jackson, where it is proposed now to establish this court.

Mr. PAYNTER. I should like to ask my colleague a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Kentucky yield to the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MCCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. Does the Senator mean by rail, when he says he lives within 50 miles of Jackson?

Mr. MCCREARY. I have here the report that was used in the House of Representatives, which says it is 52 miles from Jackson to Richmond.

Mr. PAYNTER. But has not the Senator an accurate knowledge himself with reference to that matter? Is it not 63 miles from Richmond to Beattyville and 23 miles from that point to Jackson, making 86 miles from Richmond to Jackson?

Mr. MCCREARY. It is only 50 miles from Richmond to Beattyville. That is not the route, however.

Mr. PAYNTER. How would you go?

Mr. MCCREARY. The Senator has the wrong route. The proper route is not from Jackson to Beattyville and thence to Richmond, but is from Jackson to Winchester, thence to Richmond.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will ask the Senator if it is not 86 miles from Jackson to Winchester Junction, and the distance from there to Richmond should be added to ascertain distance from Jackson to Richmond via Winchester.

Mr. MCCREARY. What junction?

Mr. PAYNTER. The junction with the railroad that runs from Winchester?

Mr. MCCREARY. Not nearly that. If you will examine the report filed with the bill in the House of Representatives, you will see that the distance from Jackson to Richmond is fixed at 52 miles.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will ask the Senator if it is not nearer from Jackson to Richmond by way of Beattyville than it is by way of Winchester?

Mr. MCCREARY. There is not much difference in the distance in the routes named. What I was about to say was, that for one hundred years in Kentucky we had just one district. The whole State formed one district, and we had five courts. In 1901 the State was divided into two districts. I helped prepare the bill which passed and became a law in 1901 and gave to each of the districts four courts. In the western district courts were established at Louisville, Paducah, Owensboro, and Bowling Green. In the eastern districts courts were established at Covington, Frankfort, Richmond, and London—four courts. They were deemed sufficient. London is in the mountains, less than 40 miles on a direct line from Jackson, where the Senator now proposes to establish a court.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Kentucky yield to the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MCCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will say it is about 125 miles by rail.

Mr. MCCREARY. I have here the report that was filed in the House of Representatives, showing that the distance from Jackson to Richmond is only 52 miles. At present there is a court at Frankfort. My colleague lives at Frankfort. He lives 100 miles or more from Jackson. I live within 48 miles of Jackson. It is not difficult for men at Jackson, Breathitt County, to go to court at Richmond. If we are to have a court in every county and then appropriate $100,000 to construct a public building in each county, this bill might be proper; but I am not in favor of that.

I am trying here to represent those who have written to me and telegraphed me and protested against the establishment of this court. I do not believe it is necessary to establish a United States court at Jackson. There is a court already 38 miles from there at London, and another at Richmond, which, as I have said, is 50 miles away. In my opinion, the subject of this bill is to prepare the way to ask for $100,000 to construct a public building at Jackson.

Mr. President, there is not only a court at Richmond, where I live, in eastern Kentucky, and 30 miles from Richmond a court at London, but the public buildings bill that just passed the House of Representatives contains an item of $40,000 to construct a public building there. There is a court also provided for in the eastern district of Kentucky at Catlettsburg, and the public buildings bill, now before the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, contains an item of $100,000 providing for the erection of a public building at that point. I am not opposed to these appropriations, but I refer to them to show that an appropriation will be asked if a court is established at Jackson. Civil and criminal business do not require the establishment of a court at Jackson.

The Representative that drafted the bill we are now considering only made provision in the bill for one week of court in March and one week in September at Jackson—two weeks in the whole year. He knew there would be but little business at Jackson, for he only provided for one week in the spring and one week in the fall. I have here a telegram from London, stating court is never held over four days in London. Court is only held four or five days in Catlettsburg, where there is already a court established. Court is only held one week at Richmond each term.

I have here the statement of the Attorney-General as to the business in the eastern district of Kentucky, and I hope Senators will listen to it. I wrote to the Attorney-General to furnish me with a statement showing the business. He says in the eastern district of Kentucky there are 16 criminal and 3 civil cases pending at Catlettsburg; 26 criminal and 13 civil at Covington; 66 criminal and 1 civil at Frankfort; 25 criminal and 18 civil at Richmond, and 113 criminal and 2 civil at London.

Mr. President, does that statement of the Attorney-General show that another place for holding court is needed? Here is a telegram I received from the clerk of the court at London:

Answering your telegram of this date, there are only thirty-three criminal cases in the United States court at London and one civil action.

There is another matter in this bill to which I wish to call attention. In my opinion there has never been a bill drafted, although many have been drafted to establish courts at certain places, that contains such a provision as this bill contains in section 2. I will read that section:

SEC. 2. That suitable rooms and accommodations are to be furnished for holding the courts at Jackson, free of expense to the Government of the United States, until such time as a Federal building shall be erected there.

I have examined a number of bills establishing courts, but I have never found in any bill a provision of that kind. The man who drafted this bill had in his mind so strong the erection of a public building that it found its way into the bill, and he provided:

That suitable rooms and accommodation are to be furnished for holding the courts at Jackson, free of expense to the Government of the United States, until such time as a Federal building should be erected there.

I know the people of Jackson, Breathitt County. They are good people, worthy people, and if a court is established there, they ought not to be required to pay the expense of it. The United States Government should pay the expense.

I think the pending bill should be amended by striking that section out. I have examined the first bill establishing a United States court in the State of Kentucky. There is no such provision in that bill. I have examined the bill passed in 1901—I have it before me—dividing Kentucky into two districts. There is no such provision in that bill. I have examined the bill establishing the court at Catlettsburg two years ago, and there is no such provision in that, and I have never seen it in any other bill.

Mr. President, I do not think my colleague, the junior Senator from Kentucky, who lives more than 100 miles from Jackson, can possibly know as much about the necessity for courts in the eastern district as the United States judge, the United States district attorney, and myself and other lawyers who have petitioned me to resist and oppose the establishment of a court at Jackson. He says that this bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee.

I was before the Judiciary Committee when the bill first came over from the House, and I presented the facts I have here presented, and I did not believe the bill would be favorably reported. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] and the Representative from that district [Mr. LANGLEY] then went before the committee without notifying me, and the bill was reported.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended. I trust I have shown that the bill should not pass.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, just one word. I hold in my hand a letter from lawyers of Jackson, which shows that ten or fifteen cases brought in the Breathitt circuit court have been removed to the Federal courts. As to London, I never heard the Senator object to the establishment of a court there.

Mr. McCREARY. I never did.

Mr. PAYNTER. I take it for granted Congress is able to take care of the interests of the people, and never will undertake to erect a public building unless it is necessary.

Mr. McCREARY. If my colleague will allow me to correct him, he speaks of London. I helped to prepare the bill which established a court at London. London is less than 40 miles from Jackson, and the people in that section ride on horseback or in vehicles, mostly on horseback. I am in favor of a public building at London, where a court has been established, and am going to vote for it, but I do not believe we ought to erect another public building less than 40 miles from there.

Mr. PAYNTER. We will cross that river when we come to it at some subsequent session of Congress.

The Senator says he has received letters and telegrams from certain persons, but I venture to assert that he has never received a single letter or telegram from any of the people of the counties, ten to fifteen, which will be served by the establishment of a court at Jackson, protesting against the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I move to strike out section 2 of the bill. I have never seen such a provision in any other bill. It was not in the bill that established the court at Catlettsburg. It was not in the bill that divided the State into two parts. I move to strike out section 2 of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, commencing in line 24, it is proposed to strike out section 2.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the language proposed to be stricken out be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That suitable rooms and accommodations are to be furnished for holding the courts at Jackson, free of expense to the Government of the United States, until such time as a Federal building shall be erected there.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that to attempt to amend the bill now at this stage of the session and send it back to the House with the conditions prevailing there would work the defeat of the bill. Therefore I can see no reason why the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. PAYNTER. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky if there can be any possible objection, because it provides that people other than the Government shall pay the expense of holding the court. I have been informed since the Senator's statement that he never saw such a provision in any bill before, that bills have passed the House containing such provisions, and one passed before this bill did; and this was required by the Judiciary Committee of the House. My attention has been called to the fact by another Senator that bills have contained such provisions. I have not—

Mr. McCREARY. I have the act establishing a court at Catlettsburg, passed three years ago, and it contains no such provision, and I have here also the act dividing the State into two judicial districts and naming four places where courts shall be held in each district, and there is no such provision in either one of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the fourth day of the session in December. I shall not make any objection to it at that time, if it appears upon investigation to be necessary. I have not had time to investigate it, and I have received a telegram showing that the sessions of the court as provided in this bill interfere with our circuit courts in some places.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Kentucky restate his motion?

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the fourth day of the next session. That will be Thursday after the first Monday in December.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the fourth day of the next session of Congress, the 10th day of December.

The motion was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to a third reading?

Mr. McCREARY. I make the point that no quorum is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ankeny	Curtis	Heyburn	Piles
Bailey	Daniel	Hopkins	Richardson
Bankhead	Depew	Johnston	Scott
Borah	Dick	Kean	Smith, Mich.
Brandagee	Dillingham	Long	Smoot
Briggs	Flint	McCreary	Stephenson
Brown	Foster	McLaurin	Stewart
Bulkeley	Frazier	Money	Sutherland
Burkett	Frye	Nelson	Taylor
Burnham	Fulton	Nixon	Teller
Burrows	Gallinger	Owen	Warner
Clapp	Gamble	Overman	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Gary	Paynter
Crane	Guggenheim	Penrose
Cullom	Hemenway	Perkins

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LILLA MAY PAVY.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6231) restoring to the pension roll the name of Lilla Stone Pavy to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 671) thereon. As we have only a limited time remaining, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lilla May Pavy, widow of Octave P. Pavy, late acting assistant surgeon, U. S. Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Lilla May Pavy."

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"Sec. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this act."

And that the House agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,

C. D. CLARK,

A. J. McLAURIN,

F. W. MONDELL,

A. J. VOLSTEAD,

JNO. W. GAINES,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the report be printed and lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks that the report be printed and lie over. Rule XXVII provides:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I raise it by the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the report is the order before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely serve notice that, so far as resistance will prevent it, this conference report will not be adopted, because it undertakes to take possession of a State against its will and apply to it a law that should not be applied to it; and I may say on behalf of Idaho, and I think I may say on behalf of California also, because the Senator from California joins me in this matter, that if the Senate has any business it desires to attend to the consideration of this report may be deferred.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow the report to go over?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am perfectly willing that it shall go over indefinitely.

Mr. FULTON. I should be glad to know—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I should be glad to know what change has been made in this bill by the conferees. I understand that it now provides for a homestead of 320 acres, regardless of the character of the land; that is, as to whether or not it is arid, semiarid, or otherwise.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have struck out "arid and semiarid."

Mr. FULTON. If that be true—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that is not true. I was on the conference committee.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Wyoming says it is not true. I was going to say that if it were true I should certainly be opposed to the utmost of my ability to adopting this report. But the Senator from Wyoming says it is not true.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULLOM. I should like at this time to submit a conference report, if this discussion is to be protracted.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not object. The pending report will be debated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If it is a conference report on an appropriation bill, I shall not object.

Mr. CULLOM. It is.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead.

Mr. HEYBURN. There has been some controversy as to whether or not the words "arid and semiarid" have been stricken out of the bill as reported. I have not had access to the report, permission having been denied to print it. I will either have to use the original—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Whether or not the words "arid and semiarid" have been stricken out, the description in the bill is such that it would fit no land except arid and semiarid land.

Mr. HEYBURN. I stated that the provision that this bill should apply to arid and semiarid lands was stricken out. I have now before me the bill as it comes from the committee.

Mr. President, I with great reluctance enter again upon the consideration of public-land matters in this body, and I had hoped that I would not be interested in the provisions of this bill when it came back from the House, we having omitted Idaho from its provisions. I shall not shirk my duty because of the time it will take to consider this matter. It is, if I may use a term that would seem, perhaps, a little harsh, a land-grabbing proposition. It is an attempt to double the area of homesteads. I say that without any reflection upon the motives or intent of the Members of the House or the members of this body who may differ with me.

I am giving my judgment in the matter. I had perhaps more accurately expressed it if I had said it was in the interest of land grabbing. The wisdom of a half century has limited homesteads to 160 acres. This is an attempt to double them.

When the bill was before the Senate and as it passed the Senate it provided that it should apply only to arid and semiarid lands, in effect, and it exempted the State of Idaho from its provisions, because in that State we have no need of this class of legislation; and while it may be, and I am willing to concede that it will be, true of Wyoming and of Colorado and some such States that this bill would not have the effect that it would have in the State of Idaho, I shall not, so far as I can prevent it, permit it to apply to the State of Idaho.

I supported a dry-farming bill in committee and in the Senate. We passed it and sent it to the House. It has not passed that body. I am not open to the charge that I am not in favor of appropriate legislation in the interest of dry farming. This is not a bill in the interest of dry farming. Under its provisions the lands upon great mountains, the lands upon the high plains of Nez Perces and Idaho counties, that yield 30 or 40 or 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, could be taken up in tracts of 320 acres. Nonirrigable land! That is the limitation that they have attempted to apply. Nonirrigable land may be land that can not be irrigated. That would be true of that kind. But there is an additional condition that it does not need irrigation.

The natural rainfall is sufficient throughout that country to raise perfect crops without irrigation. That is nonirrigable land. If it is not, why did they strike out the words that would have made it sure—the words "arid and semiarid?" Dry farming is supposed to be a method for the taking advantage of conditions where lands are arid or semiarid in order that, by cultivation of the soil, the scarcity of rainfall may be overcome.

I suspected when this bill first came up for consideration that the words "arid and semiarid" would be objectionable. The first time I proposed them I was told, with a show of candor and earnestness, that they were not necessary. They are necessary to quiet my objections to this measure. The very fact that they are objected to gives away this bill. Dry farming is supposed to be carried on only upon that class of land. This is said to be a bill in the interest of dry farming. Then, if it is, confine it to the class of land on which dry farming can be carried on. Refuse to so confine it, and I suspect the bill.

Other Senators are the best judges of conditions in their States. I am told that in Wyoming the conditions are entirely different. Then apply the bill to Wyoming. But I know of no reason why the State that is so magnificently supplied with water for the purposes of irrigation as Idaho is should be subjected to such a bill, however wise it may be in its provisions as applied to Wyoming.

Are we to have nothing left of the heritage of lands that belong to our State? Is every fad and fancy that reaches out for them to take a part of them? No, Mr. President, it is a most unfortunate attempt on the part of those outside the State to dictate the policy of the Government in our State. They either know nothing of the conditions, or they care nothing for them—one or the other. They either know nothing of what is best for the State of Idaho, or they care nothing for it; and those who represent Idaho on this floor are not disposed to stand it.

Nature has provided in that State to an unusual degree for overcoming the conditions that this bill professes to overcome. We need no such legislation, and to sit here and allow it would be a crime upon the part of anyone charged with the representation of the interests of that State. It means doubling the area of a homestead. That means cutting in two the number of citizens to be represented by settlement upon those lands. They have withdrawn a third of the State from settlement. A third of it is settled. Now they would cut the other third in two, so that it would mean that that area should comprise only one-sixth of the population of the State.

As I said, I had hoped that the discussion of public-land questions had ended for this session of Congress, and I have no doubt that that wish on my part met a hearty response in the breast of every member of this body. But I am not going to shirk a duty, however much the surfeit of the consideration of this kind of questions. I can not understand how Senators can sit here and vote for the destruction of the best interests of the State of Idaho at the request of a Senator from some other State. I have adopted and pursued the policy since I have been in this body of deferring to the judgment of the Senators from the States where the questions were applicable, and I believe that is the proper policy.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether the representation of Idaho in the Senate is not divided upon this question?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; they were not when they voted on this question, and I have no reason to suspect that they are now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My understanding is that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] favors this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the Senator from Nevada where he got his understanding? My colleague voted as I did on the bill before, and I have not heard of any change on his part.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I stand corrected, then. I also understand that the delegation in the House favor it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say, with all deference to the Senator from Nevada, that that is not a proper suggestion in this body.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the Senator was protesting against the Senate forcing a measure upon the State of Idaho against the judgment of the Idaho delegation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is not a proper suggestion in this body.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So it seemed to me that that made it a matter of proper information to give the Senate, as to whether the delegation from Idaho is unanimous on this proposition or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the suggestion in the Senate, under the rules.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will not press the suggestion. I simply asked for information as to whether there was any division of opinion amongst the Senators, and also as to what was the sentiment of the entire delegation of Idaho, understanding—

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. I decline to yield to the Senator for further consideration of such questions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield further.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think that we may safely leave it to the Senators representing States upon this floor to determine not only their own policy, but the policy of the States they represent, where the application of the policy does not extend beyond the borders of the State. It seems to me highly improper that Senators from some other States should come in as though they had either superior wisdom or superior experience or superior rights in this body to criticize and attempt to correct the representatives of any State in matters purely economical belonging to the State. I think I know whereof I speak when I say that a bill of this kind would be destructive of the best interests of the State. Senators are going to vote upon this question. I will submit a few queries to them on some phases of this case. The bill under consideration provides—

That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Colorado, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, 320 acres or less nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber located in a reasonably compact body and not over 1½ miles in length.

Mr. President, there is no occasion for enlarging the present unit of the homestead except under exceptional circumstances, in States where some provision may be necessary in order to promote and encourage dry farming. Dry farming is a new process, only partially exploited, whereby the farmer uses the land only every other year for the production of crops. He plows it once or twice this year and next year he plows it again and sows his crop. Then, if he raises a crop, he reaps it, and he allows the land to lie idle for another year. The pretext upon which the dry-farming legislation is being urged is based upon the supposition that in farming other than dry farming a man plows all of his land every year and raises a crop on all of it. Of course that is not true, but it does as well as anything else for a pretext for this class of legislation. No farmer ever does, except in the rarest instances, put all of his land in crop in one year.

It is said that we must give them more than 160 acres, because 160 acres have been accepted as a proper unit for farming other than dry farming, and that therefore, based upon the supposition that a man can crop only half of his land one year, he must have twice as much land as he has under other conditions. Those conditions are said to exist in Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, and in some other sections. They do not exist in Idaho except in the rarest cases, and not to a sufficient extent to either justify or authorize or require any legislation whatever on the subject.

Idaho has large rivers rising high in the mountains. The elevations in that State rise from about 400 feet above sea level to nine or ten thousand feet above sea level. All the farming lands in that State, I may safely say, lie under 6,000 feet above sea level. There is not any of this land in Idaho that can not be conveniently covered by water for irrigation purposes. It is a question of distance, and that question has become one of slight importance.

Mr. President, the purpose of statehood and of Government is to bring together the individual units that the life which flows from a community will build up a prosperous State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] is very anxious to have a vote on the joint resolution, but he is unavoidably detained from the Chamber to-day.

Mr. DICK. My colleague [Mr. FORAKER] has a substitute before the Senate for the unfinished business. He is unavoidably detained by illness and makes the request that the unfinished business be laid aside until he may be present.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator from Ohio asks that it be laid aside, I think the Senator from West Virginia would consent if he were here, and I therefore ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I feel constrained to continue the consideration of this question, and I ask the Senator in charge of the measure if he will not consent to have it go over?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Members of the House are very anxious, indeed, that this conference report shall get to the House as soon as possible, and I do feel that it ought to be voted upon to-day, because the session is drawing to a close. I should like very much to have the conference report passed upon as soon as possible.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I ask him whether he would be willing to have the conference report rejected by the Senate and make an effort to have California and Idaho eliminated from the provisions of the bill as it originally passed the Senate? All the Senator from Idaho and myself are contending for is that our States should be omitted from the bill. So far as I am concerned, I am not objecting to the terms for any other States, but as far as my State is concerned (and the Senator from Idaho feels the same with regard to his State) I think it is a great injustice to have the homestead entry increased to 320 acres.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from California, I will state that the question was discussed in conference as to whether the Senate should agree to the amendment of the House as to Idaho and California, and the conferees understood that as far as Idaho was concerned the Members of the House were very anxious that Idaho be included in the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will not yield a moment further if the Senator insists on violating the rule. It is not proper in this body to discuss or to refer to the attitude of Members of the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. I was answering the question of the Senator from California, but I do not particularly care to proceed.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator is answering a question—

Mr. SMOOT. I may say that I understood also in the conference that there is a division of opinion between the Senators from Idaho. Now, if the Senator from Idaho does not wish me to go any further in explanation, I certainly will not do so, but will withhold any other remark that I was going to make.

Mr. HEYBURN. I certainly do not intend to submit to a violation of the rules with reference to a discussion of the attitude and vote of the Members in the other body.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As the bill was originally reported to this Chamber I should have been glad to have seen Idaho included in the bill, but as the words "arid and semiarid" have been stricken from the bill I should not disagree with my colleague as to the measure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I thought I knew the position of my colleague when I answered the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. We have conferred in regard to this matter. So far as the question is under consideration in this body, those who here are entitled to be heard, directly or indirectly, upon this matter are in accord. If Members of Congress desire that they shall have the benefit of this legislation for their States, let them agree to eliminate the States of Idaho and California from the bill, because the Senator from California, I think, is as firmly of the opinion that it would be an injury to his State as we are that it would be injurious to Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I think it is proper for me to say in justice to the statement which was made by the Senator from Utah that he undoubtedly understood I was in favor of the bill, but I did not know at that time that the words "arid and semiarid" had been stricken from the bill. I am compelled to agree with my colleague on the proposition for the reason that we have a vast amount of territory in the northern part of the State, which, in my judgment, would be subject to entry, notwithstanding the fact that it is not arid nor semiarid. For that reason, as I said, I agree with my colleague, although I think this statement should be made in justice to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. This question was discussed very thoroughly by the conferees before an agreement was reached striking out the words "arid and semiarid" from the bill. The conferees thought, and so decided, that the words "arid and semiarid" were absolutely unnecessary when the word "nonirrigable" was used, and that that covered it absolutely. So thought every member of the conference on the part of the Senate and House, and it was not done for any other purpose than to make the bill as perfect as possible. The conferees do feel that the words "arid and semiarid" are absolutely unnecessary when taken in connection with the requirements of the bill—that the land must be nonirrigable.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it was never claimed on behalf of the dry-farming adherents that any lands other than arid or semiarid were within the contemplation of that scheme of farming. When we passed a dry-farming bill some months ago in this body we felt that we had made every possible concession to the experiment of dry farming. Dry farming is an experiment. I think it will be successful. I have seen instances of its application to the arid lands where it was successful. I am willing to concede to it the benefit of the doubt and concede that it will be successful. But this is not a dry-farming bill, because it is made applicable to other than arid and semiarid lands.

Nonirrigable has but one meaning, and that is that the land can not be irrigated or is not irrigated. Had you submitted that question to the Geological Bureau of the Government or to all the experts you could bring together five or ten years ago, they would have said that the millions of acres now under irrigation were nonirrigable, and the lands would have been taken up in areas of 320 acres instead of within the limitation of the homestead. That is the situation. Every acre of the Twin Falls reclamation scheme would have been liable to location under the provisions of this bill as nonirrigable land. The water was brought 80 miles to irrigate those lands. It is being carried far beyond that distance to irrigate other lands. Those lands would be held nonirrigable and subject to location in 320-acre tracts under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill also provides that before title can be passed to the entryman there must be one-quarter of it under cultivation. If the lands are nonirrigable it would be impossible to cultivate them until, through some engineering feat, water is brought upon the land. Therefore the land the Senator speaks of could not be settled under the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the provision that at least one-quarter or any other proportion of the lands should be under cultivation at a given time would be much more easily applied to our lands within the humid region than to those within the arid region. So there is nothing in that point that appeals to me as an answer to the suggestion which I have made. I have the bill before me. They have cut out the words "arid and semiarid," and the only word of limitation is "nonirrigable." What would be meant by nonirrigable? Lands that were not subject to irrigation because of the conditions that surrounded them. I think that would perhaps be a correct answer to that. While we have learned very much in the way of irrigation of arid lands and the reclamation of arid lands within the last two years, the probabilities are that within the next five years we will have learned much more than we have learned within all of the past.

Four years ago next August and September I was over lands that are now amongst the most beautiful and fertile and productive in Idaho, and they were a sagebrush plain upon which nothing grew except sagebrush and the meager grass that grows with sagebrush. Yet that whole country to-day is under water through a system of irrigation that was not contemplated five years ago—not thought possible or practical at all. It was not dreamed that those lands, lying so high above the river—say 1,000 feet above the gorge within which the river flows—could possibly be irrigated. Yet, through the genius and generosity of some inhabitants of the State of Pennsylvania, those lands have been brought under cultivation within that period, and on that particular tract of land, that contributed not one dollar of taxation at that time to the expense of government, not one citizen to the citizenship account of the country, the last assessment—that of this year—was over $3,000,000 on real estate, with a corresponding assessment of values of personal property and with a citizenship that will be represented on the next election day by about 5,000 voters. That is all new, and it could not have been anticipated under any known rule for estimating the future of the country. They now come in with a provision of this kind that would allow that land to be taken up in tracts of 320 acres, which would enable ten men to take up 3,200 acres in front of some irrigation scheme, and thus defeat it.

I heard some eloquent words here in regard to the preservation of the natural resources of the country, and I heard eloquent words about the forests that were to hold the waters and irrigate the lands. What becomes of that eloquence and the reasoning that was within it if you are going to give the lands to the land grabber? What is the use in conserving the waters of the country to irrigate the lands under those conditions?

What are more correctly speaking the natural resources of the country than the lands themselves? What more accurately constitute natural resources than the public lands of the United States? Yet you would cast them to the winds on a theory that in some arid section of the country some one might want to engage in the experiment of dry farming; and you would compel a great State to discount its resources, to anticipate its future, by doubling the area of the homesteads. Why, if such a law had been in effect, it is safe to say that there is not one of the great water projects out there which could have been carried to successful completion. Men knowing, as they always know months ahead—they know it through the records—that it was contemplated to bring water upon that land, would go in and take it up under this act. They would have said it is nonirrigable because there is no irrigation in sight for it. They would have said, the water 220 miles up at the head of the Snake River could not possibly be brought upon this land. They would have said that the waters of the Snake River could not have been taken upon the Twin Falls tract; and they would get in there in a little body and locate two or three or four or five thousand acres.

Mr. President, these rights, if they are ever given, will be used for just the purposes that I have pictured. They will be used to either defeat or hold up irrigation enterprises in that section of the country upon which the entire future of south Idaho rests. Are we to sit idly by and see that kind of legislation merely because somebody wants that kind of legislation in some other State? Are you going to strangle Idaho here against the protest of both Senators in this body from that State? Is your wisdom, is your wish based upon the experience that would justify you in that action when we are not trying to regulate the matter in your States?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Knox in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I have been out of the Chamber for a short time, and I would inquire the status of this conference report. Did the bill contain an amendment in either House excepting Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. We sent it out of this body excepting Idaho.

Mr. CLAPP. And did it come back including Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. We sent it out excepting Idaho and California, and we sent it out with the words of limitation "arid and semiarid lands" in it, and it has gone somewhere, and a spirit of recklessness—

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon another question as to the words "arid and semiarid lands?" Are they applicable only to Idaho, or generally?

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, they make it applicable generally; but I would say to the Senator from Minnesota that lands that might be classified under somebody's judgment as arid or semiarid in one State could have no counterpart in another.

Mr. CLAPP. I appreciate that; but I was inquiring more with reference to how far they had interfered in legislation with particular States against the wishes of the delegations from such States.

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President; the test of the faith was in those words "arid and semiarid." I was not the only Senator who discovered that fact. The dry-farming bill, which we sent out of this body early in the session, provided that the parties need not live upon this land if it were arid or semiarid land and had no water for domestic purposes upon it. If they could raise crops by this double and treble plowing and cultivating, they would be excused from living upon it, provided they lived in the State. That was as far as Congress should go in regard to dry-farming legislation; but it did not meet the approval of those who want the door opened so that they can reach out and get a double quantity of the public domain.

We have counties in our State to which this law would be applicable that have large areas of magnificent land that would be subject to location and homesteading under it. It is proposed to throw open the door. What is the purpose of those who advocate the bill? Do they not believe the statement, or are they willing to believe it and disregard it? I should like to know, and I should like to hear from them. Are they willing to do an injustice to that State merely to carry out a fad? The idea of standing up here and boasting their zeal to preserve the public land against the spoiler; the idea of standing up here and boasting their zeal to preserve the natural resources of the country, and then giving their support to a land-grabbing measure of this kind, is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to know of the Senator from Idaho if he would still oppose the bill if the word "semiarid" was put back into it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will not oppose the bill if Idaho is exempted from its provisions. It has no proper application to Idaho whatever, under any circumstances. If you want it for Montana or if you want it for Colorado, take it, and God bless you until the day that you find out the mistake you have made.

I think I know something of those conditions. There are very few men who have lived longer under public-land conditions or on the frontier than I have, and I have not lived there with my eyes shut. I have seen this kind of thing going on under just such lax legislation, and I am determined that in this hour I shall take advantage of the opportunity, not only to express my views against it, but, if I can, to defeat this measure if my strength will hold out. I should like to know upon what grounds Senators would vote to compel Idaho to submit to this outrage, when both Idaho Senators stand here opposing it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. HEYBURN. Are we to be made the plaything of other States?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have asked the Senator from Idaho to yield in order that the conference committee may not be misunderstood, and to put upon record the fact that all Idaho is not unanimous on this proposition, but that the House—I will not say the "House," but in another body is the Representative of Idaho who insists upon Idaho being included. I make that statement simply to make the record straight so far as the conference committee is concerned.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, is it the rule of conferees or the rule of this body that conferees or any others who are to settle a controversy of this kind will go outside of the Senate and go past the Senators representing a State in order to find out what is best for that State? In that case the State had better withdraw its representatives here and select those elegant gentlemen who have been consulted in this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My view of a conference committee and their duties has always been to secure, if possible, in legislation the views of the particular body which the conferees represent; but my further view of the duty of a conference committee is not arbitrarily to defeat needed legislation because the entire views of the body can not be met. But the very idea of a conference committee is to confer and agree upon those things that seem reasonable to both Houses.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I have not been in the Chamber during the entire course of the discussion, and the point I have in mind may have been covered and an explanation given regarding it; but I would be glad to know on what grounds and for what reason the words "arid" and "semiarid" have been eliminated from the bill? Has that been explained? I would ask the Senator from Idaho to explain it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. That is the precise question which I rose to ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], or the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I wish to ask why the words "arid" and "semiarid" were stricken out, because, in my judgment, that is a very important matter, notwithstanding the views of some others.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, it seems to me a very important matter, and it seems to me those are essential words in the bill. It may be that an explanation can be offered which will satisfy me; but I am frank to say that unless one shall be offered, I shall oppose the adoption of this measure. I had rather see it defeated than to see it fail to meet what to my mind was the purpose of the bill originally, if it does not apply and is not intended to apply to arid and semiarid lands.

Then I shall be opposed to another feature of the bill that does not commend itself to me, and that is, that it does not require actual residence on the land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that question will remain unanswered, I presume, as to why they eliminated the words "arid" and "semiarid." Let me call your attention—and I ask the Senator from Oregon to give attention to this, for it will be interesting to that Senator—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. HEYBURN. I read from the conference report, section 6, which the conferees have substituted for section 6 in the original bill as it went to the other House. It reads as follows—

Mr. FULTON. That is, you are about reading the section as it went to the House of Representatives?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I am going to read it as it comes back from the conference committee.

Sec. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land—

It does not say what he shall designate them as, but just "designate them"— and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this act.

Now, that is, or is intended to be, a complete substitute for section 6 of the bill as it left the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I call attention to the fact that that establishes no rule, no standard, whereby this character of land is to be taken in quantities of 320 acres. It simply leaves it at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to designate lands of this character whenever he sees fit, to be subject to entry of 320 acres. If you retain the words "arid or semiarid," you would have a standard, some rule by which it might be determined. Here it is left absolutely open to the ipse dixit of the Secretary of the Interior, wholly in his discretion, without any standard or rule by which he is to be governed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it provides that the lands must not have upon them a sufficient supply of water to use for domestic purposes—that is, they must be devoid of water sufficient for domestic purposes, such as drinking water for the family and for the stock.

Mr. FULTON. Why, then, strike out the words "arid and semiarid?"

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I heretofore made an explanation in the Senate about that and will do so again if necessary.

Mr. FULTON. We know what that means.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will inquire of the Senator from Oregon what it means as a legal proposition?

Mr. FULTON. It means land upon which there is not a certain amount of precipitation or moisture.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How much?

Mr. FULTON. I do not remember just what it is, but I think it is 9 inches.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that one reason why the conference committee agreed to the House proposition to cut out these words was that they are entirely uncertain. There is no legal determination as to what is arid land and as to what is semiarid land.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator think that he has fixed the certainty now?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think we have eliminated an uncertainty.

Mr. FULTON. Yes, and jumped from one uncertainty into a far greater one.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the condition of arid or semiarid land is a question of fact, and it varies with varying and changing seasons. There is no man who is familiar with the West who does not know that sometimes for several years the country will have a sufficient rainfall to render any irrigation unnecessary, and there is also no one acquainted with it who does not know that there will come periods of one, two, or three years, sometimes successively, when the land must be irrigated to raise a crop. That was the condition upon this coast in the early days. I remember, and I presume that many other Senators remember, when the remnants of the old irrigation ditches were still in this country. I have seen in Chester, Delaware County, Pa., irrigation ditches that were constructed by our ancestors in order to be prepared to meet the emergency of a dry season; but for some reason in more recent times they have taken chances, and sometimes they have paid for taking chances.

The arid and semiarid lands can not be classified. Last year I saw as good a corn crop growing within a close distance of Burley, in Cassia County, Idaho—which is considered to be the arid of arid lands—as you would see anywhere in this country, and during the last season I have seen wheat fields in that section of the country that yielded 32 or 33 bushels of wheat to the acre, and yet other years will come when they will produce nothing without irrigation. Is that irrigable or non-irrigable land? Is that arid or semiarid land?

But the joker in this section—if I may use such a term—is to be found here, and I want the attention of the Senator from Utah to this consideration of the amendment—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] that the conference report be withdrawn, in order that he and the Senator from Idaho may confer about this matter, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not care what becomes of it, so that it is not adopted.

Mr. NELSON. It may be that the State of Idaho could be eliminated, and I presume if that is the case—

Mr. HEYBURN. That will terminate the discussion so far as I am concerned.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that proposition to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the report be withdrawn temporarily.

Mr. KEAN. The report can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. It takes unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the report be withdrawn temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the conference report be temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. HEYBURN. With the understanding that it will not be called up again to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. With the understanding that it will not be called up again to-day, unless that course is satisfactory to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report is temporarily withdrawn.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the Senator withhold that motion for a moment in order that I may ask for the consideration of a bill which will not occasion debate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Minnesota says he has a bill he desires to have considered which will not give rise to any debate, and I therefore withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. It will not be objected to?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think so. It is a bill relating to the coal deposits in Alaska.

Mr. KEAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws his motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska. I wish to say that that bill has been prepared by the Department of the Interior and meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KEAN. I want to say, Mr. President, that I think the third section of that bill should have no place in any law enacted by Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands in the nature of a substitute, which has heretofore been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. TELLER. I will inquire if that is the bill which passed the other day and was reconsidered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill was passed and reconsidered on a previous occasion.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know whether the bill is satisfactory to the Senator from California [Mr. Flint], who moved that the vote by which it passed be reconsidered?

Mr. NELSON. The bill is as reported by the Senator without any amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Then it is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

LANDS AT CORDOVA BAY, ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the present consideration of another bill relating to Alaska, being the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of lands at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. I shall have to object to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. Sims of Tennessee a conferee on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20120) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes, in place of Mr. Murphy, relieved.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5617) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept and care for gifts presented to vessels of the Navy of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Sherman, Mr. Knapp, and Mr. Stephens of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear;

H. R. 21927. An act to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 21927. An act to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Crane] is very much interested in that bill, and I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

LANDS OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and Mr. Owen, Mr. Clapp, and Mr. Curtis were appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POWER OF CONGRESS OVER TREATIES.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the question has been raised as to the power of Congress to abrogate treaties by an act inconsistent with the treaty. I would like to submit a brief containing some extracts of decisions on that subject, and ask to have it printed as a document, and also that it be printed in the Record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

That Congress can repeal a treaty with a foreign power by an act can not be questioned, considering the many decisions of cases to that effect. Such proceedings on the part of the courts can also be defended upon the theory that a treaty is the supreme law of the land no more than that of a statute.

In case of a conflict between the treaty and the statute the same rule of interpretation is adopted that would be between statutes apparently in conflict. The courts have no discretion and will not consider whether the statute ought to have been enacted or not. The question simply for the court is, Does a fair construction of the statute conflict with the treaty?

A court will not inquire what Congress intended by the act if the words plainly import a conflict between the statute and the treaty.

Of course it is the duty of the court to reconcile a difference between the statute and the treaty if that is consistent with the plain words of the statute and treaty.

Repeals of statutes and abrogation of treaties are not favored by implication, but where the language of the statute needs no explanation or interpretation the court must enforce its meaning.

In the case of Chew Heong v. United States, 112 United States, page 549, speaking of a repeal by statute, the court says:

"There must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new laws and those of the old, and even then the old law is repealed by implication only pro tanto, to the extent of the repugnancy."

Again the court says:

"It must appear that the later provision is certainly and clearly in hostility to the former."

In this case there was no controversy in the court as to the power of Congress to repeal the treaty, but the question was whether Congress had by its act repealed certain features of the treaty.

In the case of Ropes et al. v. Clinch (8th Blatchford, 304), the syllabus reads:

"Congress may pass any law, otherwise constitutional, notwithstanding it conflicts with an existing treaty with a foreign nation."

"If an act of Congress is plainly in such conflict, a court can not inquire whether, in passing such act, Congress had or had not an intention to pass a law inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty."

"Modes specified in which Congress may destroy the operative effect of a treaty," etc.

In the case of United States v. Lee Yen Tai (185 U. S., 221), the court quotes from Whitney v. Robertson (124 U. S., 190, 194), as follows:

"By the Constitution a treaty is placed on the same footing and made of the like obligation with an act of legislation. Both are declared by that instrument to be the supreme law of the land, and no superior efficacy is given to either over the other."

In the case of Ward v. Race Horse (163 U. S., 511), Mr. Justice White, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"That 'a treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress and an act of Congress supersede a prior treaty,' is elementary." (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S., 698; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616.)

In the cases of Thomas v. Gay and Gay v. Thomas (169 U. S., p. 271) Mr. Justice Shiras, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"It is well settled that an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty and that any questions that may arise are beyond the sphere of judicial cognizance and must be met by the political department of the Government."

"It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government. The effect of treaties and acts of Congress when in conflict is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress, and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty." (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet., 253, 314; Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, 454.)

"In the cases referred to these principles were applied to treaties with foreign nations. Treaties within Indian nations within the jurisdiction of the United States, whatever considerations of humanity and good faith may be involved and require their faithful observance, can not be more obligatory."

"In the case under consideration the act of Congress must prevail as if the treaty were not an element to be considered." (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616.)

"The President and two-thirds of the Senate assenting may make a valid treaty, and it becomes the supreme law of the land, always provided that it is within the limit of the Constitution, but, although the supreme law of the land, it is subject to be abrogated by an act of Congress directly or by the enactment of a statute utterly inconsistent with the treaty. (Note from Story.)"

"Although a treaty is the supreme law of the land, it is as much subject to repeal as any legislative act, and a subsequent act of Congress conflicting with it has the effect to repeal it pro tanto." (Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, C. C., 454; Ropes v. Clinch, 8 Blatchford, 304; Gray v. Clinton Bridge Co., 1 Woolworth, 150; United States v. Tobacco Factory, 11 Wall., 264.)

"A treaty expires with the death of the king who made it. (Vattel, pp. 203 to 216.)"

In the Chinese Exclusion case (130 U. S., 589) Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"The validity of the act is assailed as being in effect an expulsion from the country of Chinese laborers, in violation of existing treaties between the United States and the Government of China, and of rights vested in them under the laws of Congress."

On page 600 the court says:

"Here the objection made is that the act of 1888 impairs a right vested under the treaty of 1880, as a law of the United States and the statutes of 1882 and of 1884 passed in execution of it. It must be conceded that the act of 1888 is in contravention of express stipulations of the treaty of 1880 and of the supplemental treaty of 1880, but it is not on that account invalid or to be restricted in its enforcement. The treaties were of no greater obligation than the act of Congress. By the Constitution, laws made in pursuance thereof and treaties made under the authority of the United States are both declared to be the supreme law of the land, and no paramount authority is given to one over the other. A treaty, it is true, is in its nature a contract between nations and is often merely promissory in its character, requiring legislation to carry its stipulations into effect. Such legislation will be open to future repeal or amendment. If the treaty operates by its own force and relates to a subject within the power of Congress, it can be deemed in that particular only the equivalent of a legislative act, to be repealed or modified at the pleasure of Congress. In either case the last expression of the sovereign will must control."

In the case of J. Ribas y Hijo v. United States (vol. 194, p. 324) the court (by Justice Harlan) says:

"We may add that even if the act of March, 1887, standing alone, could be construed as authorizing a suit of this kind, the plaintiff must fail; for, it is well settled that in case of a conflict between an act of Congress and a treaty—each being equally the supreme law of the land—the one last in date must prevail in the courts." (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616, 621; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S., 190, 194; United States v. Lee Yen Tai, 185 U. S., 213, 221.)

In the case of Grin v. Shine (vol. 187, p. 191) Justice Brown, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"But there is another consideration in this connection which should not be overlooked. While the treaty contemplates the production of a copy of a warrant of arrest or other equivalent document, issued by a magistrate of the Russian Empire, it is within the power of Congress to dispense with this requirement, and we think it has done so by Revised Statutes, section 5270, hereinbefore cited. The treaty is undoubtedly obligatory upon both powers, and, if Congress should prescribe additional formalities than those required by the treaty, it might become the subject of complaint by the Russian Government and of further negotiations. But, notwithstanding such treaty, Congress has a perfect right to provide for the extradition of criminals in its own way, with or without a treaty to that effect, and to declare that foreign criminals shall be surrendered upon such proofs of criminality as it may judge sufficient." (Castro v. De Uriarte, 10 Fed. Rep., 93.)

"Treaties duly ratified under the Constitution (Article VI) are doubtless a part of the supreme law of the land, and their stipulations and obligations will not be deemed annulled by acts of mere general legislation which can be reasonably construed otherwise." (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall., 616, 623; Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, 454; Ropes v. Clinch, 8 Blatchf., 304, 309.)

"But the mere fact that a treaty provides a mode of carrying out its provisions in the absence of legislation can not make it incompetent for Congress to pass laws in aid of the treaty, and, in order to facilitate the extradition of criminals, to dispense with a part of those preliminaries which otherwise it might be necessary for the foreign government to resort to."

In the case of The Cherokee Tobacco (11 Wallace, 616) Mr. Justice Swaine, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"But conceding these views to be correct, it is insisted that the section can not apply to the Cherokee Nation because it is in conflict with the treaty. Undoubtedly one or the other must yield. The repugnancy is clear and they can not stand together."

"The second section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States declares that 'this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.'"

"It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government. The effect of treaties and acts of Congress, when in conflict, is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress (Foster & Elam v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 314) and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty (Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, 454; The Clinton Bridge, 1 Woolworth, 155). In the cases referred to these principles were applied to treaties with foreign nations. Treaties with Indian nations within the jurisdiction of the United States, whatever considerations of humanity and good faith may be involved and require their faithful observance, can not be more obligatory, etc."

United States Statutes at Large, volume 1, page 578. Chapter LXVII. An act to declare the treaties heretofore concluded with France, no longer obligatory on the United States.

Whereas the treaties concluded between the United States and France have been repeatedly violated on the part of the French Government; and the just claims of the United States for reparation of the injuries so committed have been refused, and their attempts to negotiate an amicable adjustment of all complaints between the two nations have been repelled with indignity; and

Whereas, under authority of the French Government, there is yet pursued against the United States a system of predatory violence, infracting the said treaties and hostile to the rights of a free and independent nation:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States are of right freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France, and that the same shall not henceforth be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government or citizens of the United States.

Approved, July 7, 1798.

In the case of Taylor v. Morton, reported in Curtis's Circuit Court Reports, volume 2, pages 454 to 464, Mr. Justice Curtis, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Several questions involved in this position require examination. One of them, when stated abstractly, is this: If an act of Congress should levy a duty upon imports, which an existing commercial treaty declares shall not be levied, so that the treaty is in conflict with the act, does the former or the latter give the rule of decision in a judicial tribunal of the United States in a case to which one rule or the other must be applied."

"The second section of the Fourth Article of the Constitution is, 'This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.' There is nothing in the language of this clause which enables us to say that in the case supposed the treaty and not the act of Congress is to afford the rule. Ordinarily treaties are not rules prescribed by sovereigns for the conduct of their subjects, but contracts by which they agree to regulate their own conduct. This provision of our Constitution has made treaties part of our municipal law. But it has not assigned to them any particular degree of authority in our municipal law, nor declared whether laws so enacted shall or shall not be paramount to laws otherwise enacted. No such declaration is made, even in respect to the Constitution itself. It is named in conjunction with treaties and acts of Congress as one of the supreme laws, but no supremacy is in terms assigned to one over the other. And when it became necessary to determine whether an act of Congress repugnant to the Constitution could be deemed by the judicial power an operative law the solution of the question was found by considering the nature and objects of each species of law, the authority from which emanated and the consequences of allowing or denying the paramount effect of the Constitution. It is only by a similar course of inquiry that we can determine the question now under consideration."

"In commencing this inquiry I think it material to observe that it is solely a question of municipal as distinguished from public law. The foreign sovereign between whom and the United States a treaty has been made has a right to expect and require its stipulations to be kept with scrupulous good faith; but through what internal arrangements this shall be done is, exclusively, for the consideration of the United States. Whether the treaty shall itself be the rule of action of the people as well as the Government, whether the power to enforce and apply it shall reside in one department or another, neither the treaty itself nor any implication drawn from it gives him any right to inquire. If the people of the United States were to repeal so much of their Constitution as makes treaties part of their municipal law, no foreign sovereign with whom a treaty exists could justly complain, for it is not a matter with which he has any concern."

"That the act now in question is within the legislative power of Congress, unless that power is controlled by the treaty, is not doubted. It must be admitted, also, that in general power to legislate on a particular subject includes power to modify and repeal existing laws on that subject, and either substitute new laws in their place or leave the subject without regulation in those particulars to which the repealed laws applied. There is therefore nothing in the mere fact that a treaty is a law which would prevent Congress from repealing it. Unless it is for some reason distinguishable from other laws, the rule which it gives may be displaced by the legislative power at its pleasure. The first and most obvious distinction between a treaty and an act of Congress is that the former is made by the President and ratified by two-thirds of the Senators present; the latter by majorities of both Houses of Congress and the President, or by the Houses only, by constitutional majorities, if the President refuses his assent. Ordinarily it is certainly true that the powers of enacting and repealing laws reside in the same persons. But there is no reason, in the nature of things, why it may not be otherwise. In the country from which we have derived many political principles, the King, by force of his prerogative, makes laws for the colonies, which Parliament repeals or modifies at its discretion." (Campbell v. Cowp., 204.)

"I think it is impossible to maintain that, under our Constitution, the President and Senate exclusively possess the power to modify or repeal a law found in a treaty. If this were so, inasmuch as they can change and abrogate one treaty only by making another inconsistent with the first, the Government of the United States could not act at all to that effect without the consent of some foreign government; for no new treaty, affecting in any manner one already in existence, can be made without the concurrence of two parties, one of whom must be a foreign sovereign. That the Constitution was designed to place our country in this helpless condition is a supposition wholly inadmissible. It is not only inconsistent with the necessities of a nation, but negated by the express words of the Constitution that gives to Congress, in so many words, power to declare war, an act which ipso jure repeals all provisions of all existing treaties with the hostile nation inconsistent with a state of war."

"It is true this particular power to repeal laws found in treaties is expressly given, and is applicable only to a case of war; but, in the first place, it is sufficient to prove the position stated above, that there is nothing in the nature of things which requires that the same persons who make the law by a treaty should alone have power to repeal it. In the next place, it is also true that the powers to regulate commerce and to levy duties are as expressly given as the power to declare war, and the former are as absolute and unrestrained as the latter."

"It may be said that a declaration of war, being necessarily inconsistent with existing treaties with the hostile nation, the power to declare it is necessarily a power to repeal such treaties; but that power to regulate commerce and impose duties might be and was expected to be exercised in conformity with existing treaties. To a certain extent this may be admitted. But it can not be admitted that these powers can be or were expected to be exerted under all circumstances which might possibly occur in the life of a nation in subordination to an existing treaty, nor that the only modes of escape from the effect of an existing treaty were the consent of the other party to it or a declaration of war."

"To refuse to execute a treaty for reasons which approve themselves to the conscientious judgment of the nation is a matter of the utmost gravity and delicacy, but the power to do so is prerogative of which no nation can be deprived without deeply affecting its independence. That the people of the United States have deprived their Government of this power in any case I do not believe. That it must reside somewhere and be applicable to all cases I am convinced. I feel no doubt that it belongs to Congress. That inasmuch as treaties must continue to operate as part of our municipal law and be obeyed by the people, applied by the judiciary and executed by the President while they continue unrepelled, and inasmuch as the power of repealing these municipal laws must reside somewhere, and nobody other than Congress possesses it, then legislative power is applicable to such laws whenever they relate to subjects which the Constitution has placed under that legislative power. In conformity with these views was the action of Congress in passing the act of July 7, 1798 (1 Stat. L., 578), declaring the treaties with France no longer obligatory on the United States."

"Is it a judicial question whether a treaty with a foreign sovereign has been violated by him; whether the consideration of a particular stipulation in a treaty has been voluntarily withdrawn by one party so that it is no longer obligatory on the other; whether the views and acts of a foreign sovereign manifested through his representative have given just occasion to the political departments of our Government to withhold the execution of a promise contained in a treaty or to the act in direct contravention of such promise? I apprehend not. These powers have not been conceded by the people to the judiciary, which has no suitable means to exercise them, but to the executive and the legislative departments of our Government. They belong to diplomacy and legislation and not to the administration of existing laws. And it necessarily follows that if they are denied to Congress and the Executive in the exercise of their legislative power, they can be found nowhere in our system of government. On the other hand, if it be admitted that Congress has these powers, it is wholly immaterial to inquire whether they have, by the act in question, departed from the treaty or not, or if they have, whether such departure were accidental or designed, and if the latter, whether the reasons therefor were good or bad. If by the act in question they have not departed from the treaty, the plaintiff has no case. If they have, their act is the municipal law of the country, and any complaint, either by the citizen or the foreigner, must be made to those who alone are empowered by the Constitution to judge of its grounds and act as may be suitable and just."

On page 463, the court, continuing, said:

"Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court, said (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet., 314):

"Our Constitution declares a treaty to be a law of the land. It is consequently to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the legislature, whenever it operates of itself, without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial department, and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court."

"After commenting on the language of the article, he proceeds:

"This seems to be the language of contracts; and if it is, the ratification and confirmation which are promised must be the act of the legislature. Until such act shall be passed, the court is not at liberty to disregard the existing laws on the subject."

"I desire to add, what perhaps is not necessary, that the various suppositions of violation or departure from treaties by foreign sovereigns, or by our country, which are put by way of argument in the course of this opinion, have no reference whatever to the treaty now in question, or to any actual case; that I have not formed, or intended to intimate, any opinion upon the question whether the duty levied upon hemp, the product of Russia, is or is not higher than a just interpretation and application of the treaty with the sovereign of that country would allow; as, in my judgment, it belongs to the political department of the Government of the United States to determine this question."

NEW YORK CASE.

In the case of State of New York v. Dibble, reported in 21 Howard, 366-371, in which Justice Grier delivered the opinion of the court, the syllabus is as follows:

"A statute of the State of New York, making it unlawful for any persons other than Indians to settle or reside upon any lands belonging to or occupied by any nation or tribe of Indians within that State, and providing for the summary ejectment of such persons, is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or any treaty, or act of Congress, and the proceedings under it did not deprive the persons thus removed of property or rights secured to them by any treaty or act of Congress."

In the opinion of the court, delivered by Justice Grier, page 370, the court said:

"The only question which this court can be called on to decide is, whether this law is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or any treaty or act of Congress, and whether this proceeding under it has deprived the relators of property or rights secured to them by any treaty or act of Congress."

"The statute in question is a police regulation for the protection of the Indians from intrusion of the white people and to preserve the peace. It is the dictate of a prudent and just policy. Notwithstanding the peculiar relation which these Indian nations hold to the Government of the United States, the State of New York had the power of a sovereign over their persons and property, so far as it was necessary to preserve the peace of the Commonwealth and protect these feeble and helpless bands from imposition and intrusion. The power of a State to make such regulations to preserve the peace of the community is absolute and has never been surrendered. The act is, therefore, not contrary to the Constitution of the United States."

"Nor is this statute in conflict with any act of Congress, as no law of Congress can be found which authorizes white men to intrude on the possessions of Indians."

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On Saturday evening last I had occasion to make an address before the Young Men's Republican Club at the Union League Club House in Brooklyn. When I returned to the city my attention was called to a report in the newspapers in which I am charged with making what seemed to me a very uncalled for and unjustifiable criticism upon the Members of the House. I do not go so far as to say that the gentleman making the report deliberately misrepresented the address which I made, because I discussed the subject, and he may have received an impression that I did not intend to give, but the language, in my opinion, as reported, was and is a misrepresentation of the address, and under the circumstances I feel that I ought to at least put my understanding of the matter on record, and in order to do that I will read what I have prepared as a statement to be used by the newspapers in relation thereto:

"My attention has just been called to the report of the address that I delivered at Brooklyn last Saturday evening, in which I am reported as having made an unjustifiable assault upon Congress. The speech was entirely extemporaneous, and I am unable to see how it could have been so misunderstood.

"In alluding to some references which had been made to political corruption, I said that during an experience of nine years as a Member I had seen no sign or indication of political corruption on the part of any Member; that, in my judgment, the membership represented the flower of the communities from which they came. I referred to the fact that a Member hardly began to serve in the term for which he was elected before he was practically involved in a contest for his reelection, and that the action of Members was necessarily largely affected by considerations involved in their reelection. I used this situation for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity for standing by Representatives and protecting them from the attacks of those who were demanding with threats improper legislation. It was an incident and by no means the main topic of the address.

"In illustrating the point I did use the remark said to have been made by Mr. CANNON. It was received, as I understood it, in the spirit in which it was originally made, and as I intended it—as a piece of jocose hyperbole—and it was not intended by me, nor was anything else that I said intended, as a reflection upon the Members of either branch, and until I saw the report it never entered my mind that anyone would so understand or construe it.

"I have had frequent occasion, but have seldom taken occasion, to correct newspaper reports. I feel justified in doing so in this instance because of the high regard that I entertain for the membership of both branches and the uniformly kind, considerate, and appreciative treatment that I have received at their hands." [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4825. An act for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4825. An act for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

JENNIE CARROLL AND MABEL H. LAZEAR.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21884) granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the rolls of the War Department—The name of Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, major and surgeon, United States Army, and pay her for and during the time of her natural life, in lieu of all pensions, the sum of $125 per month, in special recognition of the eminent services of said James Carroll in discovering the means of preventing, as well as the cause and method of transmission and propagation of, yellow fever, and demonstrating on his own person the truth of the theory of the transmission and propagation of yellow fever infection by mosquitoes, and

The name of Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Dr. Jesse W. Lazear, late acting assistant contract surgeon, United States Army, and pay her for and during the time of her natural life, in lieu of all pensions, the sum of $125 per month, in special recognition of the eminent services of said Jesse W. Lazear in discovering the means of preventing, as well as the cause and method of transmission and propagation of, yellow fever, and demonstrating on his own person the truth of the theory of the transmission and propagation of yellow fever infection by mosquitoes, and the sacrifice of his life in proving the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this a motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and I will ask the gentleman to withhold—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask you a question; I am not going to object. What was the rank of those men?

Mr. DALZELL. Carroll was a major and Lazear was a contract surgeon. Let me say, Carroll was of the same rank as Major Reed, for whose widow we have already provided. At the beginning of the Cuban war a commission was appointed, composed of three members, Major Reed, Major Carroll, and Dr. Lazear, to seek discovery of the causes of yellow fever. They did discover the cause of yellow fever, but they all perished in consequence of the exposure they submitted themselves to in making the discovery. Major Reed died some time after the experiment, and Congress passed a bill giving his widow $125 a month pension. Major Carroll survived the experiment. They all submitted themselves to be bitten by mosquitoes. Major Carroll lived for some considerable time after, but finally died of the poison in his system as a consequence of the experiment. Doctor Lazear died at the time the experiment was made.

Mr. KEIFER. Died of yellow fever.

Mr. DALZELL. He died of yellow fever. Every medical society of the United States and every chamber of commerce has come down here appealing that we put these two widows upon the same basis that we put Mrs. Reed, upon the ground, as far as the medical societies are concerned, of the great contribution to science that these men rendered, and upon the ground, so far as commercial bodies are concerned, of the immense amounts of money saved in our Southern cities and elsewhere by the removal of the yellow-fever scourge—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not objecting, and I am not going to call the roll on it, either. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GRANTING ADDITIONAL LANDS TO IDAHO UNDER THE CAREY ACT.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, agreeing to the amendment, and passing the joint resolution of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 51, providing for additional lands for Idaho under the provisions of the Carey Act.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 197, nays 26, answered "present" 16, not voting 148, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

RELIEF ON ACCOUNT OF FIRE IN CHELSEA, MASS.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of the bill (H. R. 21927) to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of the pay director at the naval station at Boston, Mass., all expenditures made by him on account of the recent fire at Chelsea, Mass., in the aggregate sum not exceeding $600. And that the accounting officers of the Treasury are also authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of the Marine-Hospital Service located at Chelsea, Mass., the sum of not exceeding $150, expended in taking care of accident, emergency, and maternity cases caused by the recent fire at said Chelsea. And the said hospital authorities are hereby authorized to expend in future cases of like character, out of their appropriation, an additional sum of not exceeding $3,000; such authority to be in force until such patients can be cared for in local hospitals, and not for a longer period than until the close of the fiscal year 1909.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order or demand a second, whichever is necessary.

The SPEAKER. The request is for unanimous consent for consideration and for passing the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, I want to reserve the right to object until the bill is explained. I want to know something about it before I agree to it.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent for a short time the gentleman can explain the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, recently a bill appropriating $250,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the great calamity in the Southern States passed through the House without objection from any quarter. Here is a little bill calling for less than $5,000 to relieve the sufferers by the fire at Chelsea, Mass., where from 15,000 to 17,000 people were rendered homeless inside of six hours, and the gentleman from Tennessee wants an explanation. I will give it to him.

Immediately following the fire, acting under Executive order, the authorities at the navy-yard at Boston furnished the sufferers from that fire mattresses, blankets, drugs, and so forth, to the amount of about $600, and the Marine Hospital located in Chelsea, the city hospital being destroyed by the fire, was thrown open under Executive order to women about to be confined, and to accident and emergency cases, and they expended about $150 for subsistence and drugs for those patients. It is desired to reimburse the accounting officers of the Marine Hospital and the navy-yard, and it is desired to make it possible for the citizens of Chelsea to have the use of the Marine Hospital for accident and emergency cases during the next fiscal year, or until that stricken city can reestablish a hospital. Does that explain to the gentleman the cause and reason for this bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That explains it very thoroughly, and I have no objection. As to the relief of the Martinique sufferers, I went down into my own pocket and sent them $50 and voted against the Congressional appropriation to relieve them. I have no objection to this bill, although I had a right to ask the gentleman for an explanation of it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL REPORT ON THE DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of House joint resolution 176, providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, the same to be first revised and brought to date under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 60,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ACCEPTANCE AND CARE OF GIFTS PRESENTED TO VESSELS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of the bill (S. 5617) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept and care for gifts presented to vessels of the Navy of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept and care for such gifts in the form of silver, colors, books, or other articles of equipment or furniture as, in accordance with custom, may be presented to vessels of the Navy by States, municipalities, or otherwise. The necessary expense incident to the care and preservation of gifts of this character which have been or may hereafter be accepted shall be defrayed from the appropriation "Equipment of vessels."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS, FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, and ask for a conference thereon with the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules, disagreeing to the Senate amendments, and asking for a conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 258, answered "present" 9, not voting 120, as follows:

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following order:

That immediately on the adoption of this order the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21946, the general deficiency appropriation bill; that general debate thereon be closed; and that the first reading of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be dispensed with.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that is the same order—

Mr. DALZELL. To close general debate when?

Mr. TAWNEY. To close general debate immediately on going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was busy at the time; but as the Chair gathers the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, it is to suspend the rules, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill, and that there be no general debate thereon, and the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the motion.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair will first put the motion. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules; that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill; that there shall be no general debate thereon, and that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry is, If this motion be adopted, will it cut off discussion under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, and I also desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that is, if this order reported by the gentleman from Minnesota is not susceptible of being divided into three substantive propositions?

The SPEAKER. Not under the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but you have not got the rules suspended.

The SPEAKER. Oh, but it is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the motion to suspend the rules has three substantive propositions in it.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to suspend the rules, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri, is to suspend all rules, and this motion gives the House the liberty, under existing orders of the House, by a majority vote to do exactly what the motion proposes. If the majority does not sustain the motion, the motion fails. There is no trouble about it. [Laughter.] The rulings of the Chair have been uniform under Mr. Blaine, under Mr. Colfax, during the last Congress, during this Congress; there is no precedent to the contrary, because a division of the question only comes under the rules which it is proposed to suspend.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there has never been a motion like this made upon which the question has arisen.

The SPEAKER. Why, the books are full of precedents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not like this.

The SPEAKER. Oh, well; like unto this and analogous to it. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second, under the rule, is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time. I will explain the bill when we go into the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER said:

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity which compels me to indulge in the remarks I am about to make. On April the 20th last the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, through one of its members, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], unanimously reported to the House with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 20112) known as the campaign contribution publicity bill. There is no politics in the bill. It was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], one of the most distinguished Republican Members of the House and one of the very best men in his party. The sole and only aim and purpose of this measure is to purify elections, the wisdom and necessity of which is conceded by all fair men in both the great political parties.

The demand by the people and the press of the United States for this legislation, regardless of party affiliation, is so universal that, if given consideration, the bill referred to would, in my judgment, receive unanimous support, or nearly so. This meritorious and most desirable measure would have passed the House long ago but for the persistent and arbitrary refusal of the Speaker to recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to call up the bill and move its passage. The necessity for a chief officer to preside over our deliberations—theoretical deliberations only, though they be—and the necessity for clothing that officer with great power we all admit. But, Mr. Speaker, I deny the parliamentary or constitutional right of any man intrusted with official power to wantonly and arbitrarily exercise the power of his office to thwart, trample upon, and defeat the will of the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That you, Mr. Speaker, have been appealed to and pleaded with by Members of Congress, and by distinguished citizens who are not Members, to graciously grant recognition for the purpose of putting the pending publicity bill on its passage I have been informed and believe to be true. Why have you refused? Is it because you doubt the intelligence or soundness of judgment of the gentlemen who constitute the committee which reported this bill? That committee is composed of eight Republicans and five Democrats. Many of these gentlemen have more than once presented to the Speaker of this House commissions from their constituents attesting their personal worth and their integrity of character. You, yourself, Mr. Speaker, have given each of them your own official approval and indorsement at least twice, and many of them thrice, during this session of Congress. The chairman of that committee, by the action of the Speaker of this House, has been promoted to a place on the Ways and Means Committee, the most important committee of the House. Another member, by the act of the Speaker, holds a place on the great law committee of the House—the Committee on the Judiciary. Another is a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and another a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, all great committees. You have given to each and every one of these gentlemen your solemn, official indorsement; and yet, when in the performance of official duty, after due and careful consideration, they report a bill demanded by every fair-minded man in this country who desires to restore and preserve inviolate the sanctity and purity of the ballot box and to stay corrupting influences which degrade and debauch the American citizen, you ruthlessly repudiate and spurn them. I demand to know, Mr. Speaker, why this is so?

Mr. Speaker, if the principle or any provision contained in the campaign publicity bill is unwise, unpatriotic, dangerous, or vicious, can you not rely, with implicit confidence in the result, upon your partisan followers to defeat it? Have you lost faith in the wisdom and patriotism of the Republican party as represented on this floor? Have you lost the mighty power of your own persuasive eloquence, and the magic of your vehement gesture?

Mr. Speaker, I shall do no violence to your great intelligence. The fact is, you refuse to permit consideration of the bill which requires publicity of campaign contributions, because you prefer to keep the people of the United States in darkness rather than give them light; because you know this bill would prevent, or at least check, the accumulation of stupendous sums which have been used to corrupt the voter and control elections; because you defiantly set your individual will against the will of 80,000,000 people; because you fear the Republican party can not survive the storms of opposition now gathering thick and fast about it without the use of a corrupt boodle fund; because you know this bill would pass, and you fear its passage would sound the death knell of a party already too long endured. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I concede the right of the Speaker to refuse recognition to ask for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill to which he is opposed. I emphatically deny his right to refuse recognition to move the passage of a bill like this—a bill general in its character.

He has no such legitimate power. When he exercises such power he is a usurper, and nothing less. The House has a constitutional right to vote on the passage of a bill requiring publicity of campaign contributions, and no one man, not even the Speaker, has either the moral or legal right to prevent it, though the Speaker has done so, and is doing so. The framers of our Constitution sought to establish for us a free, representative form of government in which the voice of the American people, through their chosen representatives, might be heard. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have here in practice a one-man government. Were our forefathers wrong? Should they have written into the Constitution that the lower branch of the legislative department of Government should consist of but one man—a Speaker—with plenary power to do or not to do whatever his fancy or prejudice might suggest? No, Mr. Speaker; the framers of the American Constitution were right and not wrong; and I rejoice in an unflinching hope and belief that we will yet have opportunity to enact into law the principle of this bill, which means so much to the American people, and which will aid in restoring to them a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The poet inspires us with hope in the lines:

Time at last sets all things even,
And if we do but watch the hour.
There never yet was human power
Which could evade, if unforgiven,
The patient search and vigil long
Of him who treasures up a wrong.

[Applause.]

I do not harbor any maudlin sentimentality which induces me to condone or palliate insufferable arrogance, flagrant usurpation, or reckless despotism in office, merely because of the genial personality of one who daily crucifies the vital principles of free, representative government upon the altar of party, for partisan purposes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A familiar quotation from Shakespeare, slightly paraphrased, accurately expresses my convictions:

My tables, meet it is,
I set it down
That one may smile, and smile,
And be a "tyrant" still.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

CHANGE OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1908.

Mr. MURPHY, of Wisconsin, respectfully requests to be relieved from service as conferee on Senate amendments to House bill 20120.

J. W. MURPHY.

Hon. J. G. CANNON,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this request will be granted and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in the place of Mr. MURPHY.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. RUCKER. I yield back to the gentleman from Missouri the balance of my time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] use some of his time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I find in the RECORD of May 15 that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, during my absence from the House made some remarks about a minute and a half speech which I delivered in this body May 14 last, in which I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] sought to leave the impression with the House that the statements I had made were not strictly true.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] is not present now.

Mr. VREELAND. I thank the gentleman from New York for the information.

Mr. Speaker, I do not attach any great importance to this incident. I do not desire to reply to the gentleman from New Jersey in any spirit of resentment or bitterness. I appreciate the overwrought and excited state of mind of the gentleman from New Jersey for the past few days. And yet I think it is due to the House and to myself to make clear in the minds of my colleagues what the facts are.

I only spoke for a moment. I spoke without expecting to speak at that time. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] read to the House some telegrams from several small banks in Pennsylvania opposing the currency bill before the House. I said to the House that I happened to have in my pocket a letter from a banker in Atlanta, Ga. My eyesight is not quite as good as it used to be, and in glancing hastily at the letter the name looked to me like First National Bank. If I had put on my glasses I would have discovered that it was the Third National Bank. I looked at the top of the letter and saw the figures "$1,000,000," which I assumed to be the capital of the bank.

I find upon examining the letter that the $1,000,000 included the capital and surplus. The gentleman from New Jersey thereupon informs the House that there is no First National Bank in Atlanta, Ga.; that there is no bank in Atlanta, Ga., with a capital of over $500,000; therefore I must be quoting a letter from a bank which has no existence. The gentleman from New Jersey says he is intimately acquainted with Mr. McCord, of the Third National Bank of Atlanta. He must, therefore, have known that there was such a bank; that it is the largest bank in Georgia; that Mr. McCord, one of its executive officers, is a member of the American Bankers' legislative committee of fifteen. The letter did state that he had written to every member of the delegation from the State of Georgia to support the House bill. These were the main facts. Why should the gentleman bring up these petty details and seek to convey to this House the impression that I misstated the facts about them? I want to say further to the gentleman that not only Mr. McCord, but eight out of the fifteen members of the legislative committee of the American Bankers' Association have written to me or to others on the special committee appointed by the conference that they favor the legislation in this bill. Now, I want to be exactly accurate in stating their position. I will print the letter from Mr. McCord as a part of my remarks, because his statement of his position represents exactly the statements of the other members of the legislative committee of the American Bankers' Association as to their position. All of these gentlemen favor the bill known as the "bankers' bill," introduced by Mr. McKINNEY, of Illinois. All of them would prefer to see that enacted into law.

But as individuals, speaking for their individual banks, desiring as practical men of affairs to get such legislation as can be had at this time, they favor the passage of this bill, including as it does provision for a currency commission to take up and report upon the whole subject of banking and currency at the next session of Congress. I will print also as a part of my remarks some other telegrams that may interest the gentleman. It may interest him to know that the Kansas Bankers' Association, in their State convention, 600 in number, indorsed the principles of this bill within the past few days. It may interest him to know that the Alabama State Bankers' Association, in their State convention, held at Montgomery, Ala., on Saturday last, unanimously adopted resolutions indorsing the principles of this bill and asking their Representatives in Congress to support it.

I did state to the House that no "round robins" have been used in behalf of this bill. I did state to the House that I have not sent out letters to bankers and associations asking them to support this bill. Perhaps I ought to qualify that statement by saying that I have written to no banker in the United States in relation to this bill who has not first written to me or who has not personally asked me to send to him a copy of the bill and keep him informed as to its progress. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago a large number of bankers from the West and South were in this city for the purpose of opposing the Aldrich bill before the Banking and Currency Committee. I spent many hours in talking with those gentlemen about currency legislation. I talked with them about the currency bill which I at that time introduced. Quite a number of them asked me to send them copies of the bill and write them regarding prospects for legislation. I have sent out, I suppose, fifteen or twenty letters, entirely in response to letters received from bankers or in carrying out the agreement I made with these bankers when they were in the city.

I did not say that this letter from Mr. McCord came by mere chance. It could not come by chance. It must have been intentionally written and addressed to me and deposited in the post-office. What I said was that I had it in my pocket by mere chance, it having come in that morning.

Enough for that. I want to make another statement, and that is that the letter which I sent out was true in fact when I wrote it and it is true in fact to-day. The letter which the gentleman from New Jersey sent out to 6,500 banks of the United States was not true in fact when it was written and is not true in fact to-day. The gentleman from New Jersey sent out a letter denouncing a bill which was not then in existence. His letter was dated May 9, and the Republican conference committee had not decided on the bill. The committee appointed by that conference had not reported a bill when he sent out this letter to 6,500 banks. Hence it was impossible for him to know what would be the contents of the bill that would be brought in. He denounced a bill and asked bankers to telegraph their Members and Senators against a bill without knowing what its provisions would be.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey seeks to cast a slur upon my district and upon myself by referring to it as "a hayfield and hopyard district." The gentleman's shaft is pointed with malice, but it leaves no sting in my bosom. I do not feel that I need to defend the district which I have the honor to represent. It is a typical American district, filled with intelligent and patriotic American citizens, as are the great majority of the Congressional districts of the United States. [Applause.]

We have no great metropolis like Elizabeth, N. J., where the gentleman from New Jersey lives. Yet it is full of cities and towns and villages and broad meadows stretching out around them, where hay is made in summer. It is the largest Republican district in the State of New York, and that speaks volumes for the intelligence of its people. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] It is the largest dairying district in the State of New York, and that means that we have hayfields in plenty. It is a large manufacturing district, its products running from locomotives to toothpicks. It has plenty of colleges and schools and libraries and newspapers and books, so that knowledge is as accessible to us as to a resident of New Jersey. In addition to that, I send many copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD every day into my district, and I hope that our people read the financial speeches of the gentleman from New Jersey and thus obtain financial knowledge at its very fountain head. [Laughter.]

Within the borders of my district is the great original Chautauqua, to which many thousands of students go every summer and whose educational influence has extended to every part of the United States. From the bosom of this great Chautauqua dozens of other lesser Chautauqs have sprung, making new centers from which radiate good influences in different parts of the country. Our people are intelligent and patriotic, but we claim no monopoly of these virtues.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey is pleased to refer to me as "a hayfield financier." I think very likely the gentleman is right. I at least have not arrived at that unfortunate stage where I assume to have in my own person a monopoly of all the financial knowledge that exists in this country. [Laughter.] "Hayfield" is not a term of reproach in this country. The millions of our people who work in those hayfields are the great conservative influence of our country. They own the soil and have given hostages to fortune.

The sons of those men who work in hayfields have ruled this country since its birth. George Washington left the hayfield over there on his estate at Mount Vernon and became President of the United States. Why, Mr. Speaker, the country districts are the great reservoirs from which the exhausted intellectual life of the cities is recuperated. [Applause.] Go into the great cities of the country and you will find nine-tenths of the great merchants, nine-tenths of the great bankers, the great lawyers, the great preachers and captains of industry are men who came from these hayfields to which the gentleman refers as a term of reproach. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this body for nearly ten years. I have been closely associated with my colleagues in this House during all that time, and whatever of reputation I may have for truth and accuracy of statement will rest upon the personal intercourse and relations I have had with Members of this House, and not what I may say about it, or what the gentleman from New Jersey may say about it. [Loud applause.]

THE THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF ATLANTA,
Atlanta, Ga., May 12, 1908.

HON. EDWARD VREELAND, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of April 30, inclosing a copy of your bill, also a copy of your letter of May 4 addressed to Mr. Lewis E. Pierson, chairman, Lakewood, N. J., on which last-named letter there was a footnote addressed to me, were duly received during my absence. I have been out of the city during the last ten or twelve days and have just returned from holding a group meeting of group No. 3 of the Georgia Bankers' Association at Rome, Ga., and at this meeting I took occasion to explain your bill as I understood it from our conversation, which I find has been fully confirmed upon reading the bill since my return. Then again at the meeting of the Atlanta Clearing House Association this afternoon I read the bill and explained its provisions, and it has met with favor at both of these meetings.

I am preparing a letter which I intend to send to-morrow to our Representatives in Congress, asking them, after they have given their complimentary vote to their own measure, to do us the kindness to sustain your measure. I will be perfectly frank with you and say that I do not agree as to clearing-house issues; that I am unqualifiedly for asset or credit currency; but I fully agree with you that it is impossible to obtain that legislation at the present time, and in the meantime, while we are waiting for that, your bill gives us an excellent provision to meet emergencies, and as a member of the Georgia association and a member of our local clearing house I am willing to do what I can to bring our people to the support of the bill; but of course you understand my position on the currency commission of the American Bankers' Association—that in that capacity we will have to consult before we can act as members. I believe the measure that you have proposed will grant us a relief in times of emergency that will satisfy the people and be safe to the banks and safe to the Government.

If you will pardon me for one suggestion, in looking over the list of banks in our sister States I find that the State of South Carolina could not qualify under your bill as to the amount of capital and surplus of national banks. Could it not be arranged that a provision may be placed in the bill where the total of national banks by capitalization in any of the States does not come to the requirement of $5,000,000 of capital and surplus, that they could take in banks on the border of their State in order to arrive at their full quota, or, better still, that if all of the national banks in the State do not show a capital and surplus of $5,000,000, but a capital and surplus of $4,000,000, then when all of the national banks in that State join the clearing house, the same may be organized. This, I think, would relieve the situation that will be embarrassing to the national banks located in States where they have not the full amount of capital and surplus.

My letter to the Georgia members will go forward to-morrow. Wishing you much success in this measure, and hoping that the conference of your party will bring us a satisfactory bill along the lines suggested by you, I beg leave to remain,

Yours, very truly,

JOS. A. MCCORD,
Vice-President.

LOUISVILLE, KY., May 16, 1908.

HON. MR. VREELAND,

WM. BARRET RIDGELY.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Missouri to use some of his time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting, I believe, for me to say that I concur substantially in the timely remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] regarding the failure of the Republicans in this House to call up and pass the campaign contribution publicity bill, which is now on the Calendar and can be called up and passed and made a law before this session adjourns. If we do not pass it now, it will be too late to make it effective for the campaign of 1908.

In my opinion this publicity campaign contribution bill is one of the most important measures before this House. It is a bill for more honest elections, to more effectually safeguard the elective franchise, and it affects the entire people of this country. It concerns the honor of the country. The honest people of the land want it passed. All parties should favor it. Recent investigations conclusively demonstrate how important to all the people of the country is the speedy enactment of this bill for the publication before elections of campaign contributions.

I have been for years a consistent advocate of this legislation. I have done all in my power to get a favorable report from the committee, and I shall do all I can to enact it into law. Many people believe that if a law were on the statute books similar to the provisions of this bill, the Republicans would not have been successful in the election of 1896. The Republicans succeeded that year because they raised the largest corruption fund in all our history. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In every national contest of recent years the campaign has been a disgraceful scramble to see which party could raise the most money, not for legitimate expenses, but to carry on a system of political iniquity that will not and can not bear the light of publicity. Political corruption dreads the sun of publicity and works in secret and in darkness. Pass a publicity law along the lines of this bill and I predict that in future national campaigns there will be no criminations and recriminations such as disgraced the closing days of the last Presidential contest. [Applause.] Napoleon said victory was on the side of the heaviest guns. There are many thoughtful people in this country who have been saying ever since 1896 that political victory in our Presidential contests is on the side of the campaign committee which can raise the largest boodle fund.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with this national publicity bill it is interesting to consider the amounts of money contributed and expended in Presidential campaigns in the past by the campaign committees of the two great parties. Prior to 1860, so far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have given the matter very careful investigation—no national committee in any Presidential contest expended much more than $25,000, except, perhaps, in the campaign of 1832, when Jackson triumphed over the corruption fund of the Bank of the United States. But that is now ancient history, and has very little to do with the present-day practices of national committees, and I will not spend further time in discussing it.

However, I want to read to the House a statement which has been carefully compiled by very competent and experienced men, showing the expenditures of the Republican and Democratic national committees in every Presidential contest from 1860 to 1904. Of course I do not declare that the statement of expenditures which I am about to read is absolutely accurate, but I do say—and a careful investigation, in my opinion, will substantiate it—that these expenditures are approximately correct.

Expenditures by the Republican and Democratic national committees in the Presidential contests from 1860 to 1904.

Year.	Republican candidate.	Democratic candidate.	Expended by Republican national committee.	Expended by Democratic national committee.
1860	Abraham Lincoln.....	Stephen A. Douglas.....	$100,000	$50,000
1864	do.....	Geo. B. McClellan.....	125,000	50,000
1868	U. S. Grant.....	Horatio Seymour.....	150,000	75,000
1872	do.....	Horace Greeley.....	250,000	50,000
1876	Rutherford B. Hayes.....	Samuel J. Tilden.....	950,000	900,000
1880	James A. Garfield.....	W. S. Hancock.....	1,100,000	355,000
1884	James G. Blaine.....	Grover Cleveland.....	1,300,000	1,400,000
1888	Benjamin Harrison.....	do.....	1,350,000	855,000
1892	do.....	do.....	1,850,000	2,350,000
1896	William McKinley.....	William J. Bryan.....	16,500,000	675,000
1900	do.....	do.....	9,500,000	425,000
1904	Theodore Roosevelt.....	Alton B. Parker.....	3,500,000	1,250,000

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said, perhaps these figures may not be absolutely accurate, and perhaps there is no way now by which they can be substantiated by legal proof, but they have been carefully compiled from the best obtainable sources, and I doubt not they will be extremely interesting to students of political events who desire to make careful investigation and comparison of campaign contributions.

These national campaign funds reveal a condition of affairs concerning our recent Presidential elections which, to every right-thinking citizen, should be sufficient reason for the enactment into law of the bill I am discussing; and this measure especially appeals to those patriotic people of our country who see grave dangers to the Republic in the growing evils incident to these large campaign funds, and who believe that they are contributed in most instances by the criminal trusts and protected industries solely for the purpose of debauching the electorate and defeating the will of the honest people of the country.

This important bill for publicity of campaign contributions is a nonpartisan measure. There should be no politics in it. We should all advocate it from patriotic motives; but some of the gentlemen on the other side are now playing politics with it, are injecting party politics into it, and are doing everything in their power to prevent the Members of this House who sincerely favor the bill from having an opportunity to vote for it. I do not hesitate to say that if this bill were presented to the membership of this House on its merits it would pass by an overwhelming majority. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall], who introduced the bill. I wish to hear his honest opinion of the thimble-rigging which has been resorted to regarding the bill ever since this session began.

It is a shame the way this bill is being strangled to death. We Democrats favor it. We will vote for it if you Republicans will give us a chance. We challenge the Republican leaders in this House to do so. I want some Republican to give us a reason why this bill is not called up, considered, and passed. Is the Speaker against it? If the Speaker is the man against it, let us know it and we will hold the Speaker responsible. Is the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means opposed to it? Let us know, and we will hold him responsible. Is the Committee on Rules responsible for holding up this very important bill? If so, let us know and we will hold that committee responsible. Let us fix the responsibility.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This same committee last year did not report the bill, and they did not report it this year. Could not the Speaker appoint a committee that would report it, if he wanted to?

Mr. SULZER. Oh, yes. I am trying to find out who is responsible for the defeat of this desirable legislation. I want to fix the responsibility, so that the people will be able to take action concerning it in the coming campaign. The Republicans here can pass it. They are in the majority. We Democrats favor the bill. We will vote for it. If the bill is not acted upon, the Republicans of this House must bear the responsibility and take the consequences.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this Congress will be recreant to its duty and false to the people of this country if it does not take action in regard to this matter before we adjourn. The passage of this publicity bill regarding contributions to national campaign committees will be a great victory for the plain people of the land, and will go as far, in my judgment, as anything that can be devised at the present time by the ingenuity of the human mind to effectually put a stop to political iniquity in Congressional and Presidential campaigns. These great political contributions made to the national committees of both parties by the criminal trusts, and the sordid syndicates, and the gigantic corporations, and the national banks, and the vested interests, and the plutocracy, and last, but not least, the protected industries of the country, are not voluntary contributions, but are levied like taxes, and are generally made with the understanding, express or implied, that the contributors shall be protected against the rights of the people, and shall be secure in robbing the many for the benefit of the few, and shall have meted out to them by the party in power certain special privileges which are repugnant to our free institutions and contrary to the fundamental principles of the Democratic party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 14382. An act to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1062) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Weaver.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4186) creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14382. An act to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky; and

H. R. 20345. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I have been very deeply interested in the comments made by my two friends on the other side, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], with reference to this publicity bill, and the question has arisen in my mind, as a result of their comments, as to whether or not their speeches were made in behalf of their candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Bryan. That question arose and has a double force with me, because Mr. Bryan was the chief advocate of the Democratic party who appeared before our committee demanding a publicity bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to enlighten the gentleman if he is seeking information.

Mr. BURKE. I have not the time to yield, Mr. Speaker. My time is too short. I have only two minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Then the gentleman ought not to ask for information.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, there is no question in my mind. If there ever was, it has already been answered by Mr. Bryan himself. The question which arose at the beginning of the hearings of that committee was whether or not the Democratic party was sincere in its demand for the passage of a publicity bill. In pursuance of their plan Mr. Bryan appeared before the committee and demanded the passage of a bill that would enable the people of this country to learn by whom, when, and where contributions were made for political purposes in this country. Within a few days after he appeared before that committee, avowing with all the sincerity that usually characterizes Mr. Bryan and his followers what his wishes were, the following interview was given out with reference to the use of money in the Denver convention, and it was given out by Mr. Bryan himself:

In an interview in New York on the subject of the efforts of his opponents to prevent his nomination at Denver Mr. Bryan said:

"The Commoner has stated that money is now being used to secure uninstructed delegations with a view to securing one-third of the delegates to the national convention with the purpose of using the one-third to control the nominations. I am the editor of the Commoner and I know whereof I speak."

"Will you give the names of those who are using the money against you?"

"I will not give the names," replied Colonel Bryan, "of those using the money, and neither will I tell where it is being used. I do not care to go further than what I have said."

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bryan said, "I do not care to go further than what I have said." That being the case, with every lecture platform in the country open to him, with the columns of every newspaper in the United States open to him, and the columns of the Commoner itself at his command, this gentleman, who poses as the chief advocate of a publicity bill, with personal knowledge of corruption money being used for his defeat as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, has sealed his lips as closely as they will be when he lies in the silence of his grave. [Applause on the Republican side.] Consistency, thou art indeed a Jewel!

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, when the liability bill was under debate, I made the statement that the reason it could not receive more consideration, debate, and amendment was because of the filibuster that had been going on on the other side. The retort was made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] that that was not the reason, that we had plenty of time to amend it, and said the Democrats would grant unanimous consent that we should take up that bill then and amend it, the gentleman from Mississippi suggesting thirty-five minutes and the gentleman from Alabama five hours. That seemed on the face of it a fair retort to my criticism. It may have deceived some persons. Inasmuch as a Republican objected, it may have looked to the country as if the Democrats were willing to amend the bill and as if the Republicans were unwilling, but it is very obvious, I am sure, to Members of this House that that is not the fact. The gentleman from Mississippi said my remarks were buncombe. I think the suggestion of amendment, made on the other side, is more deserving of that epithet. Why is it that we can not take up measures like that and discuss them and amend them at length?

It is because we have not the time; it is because for weeks now half of our time has been taken by useless roll calls, and the gentlemen can not fairly say that we and not they are to blame for the little time given to any individual bill. The gentleman from Georgia said he wanted five hours to properly consider that bill, and certainly that would not have been too much. We had not the five hours we could spare in these last days of the session because of the waste of time by filibustering. But there is a deeper reason than that. The conditions under which we are now legislating, and which the filibuster on that side has inevitably occasioned, prevent deliberate legislation. The Democratic party is attempting to say that they shall decide what legislation shall be enacted. The Republican party, which is responsible for legislation, denies the Democratic claim. We can not allow that side of the House to say, "Here is a bill to which we do not object; we will allow that to be amended," and then on other bills, just as deserving, that this side desires to amend, allow them to object. We do not propose to abrogate our function of deciding what shall be done. The fact is that the filibuster which has been originated has engendered, and necessarily, on both sides of the House a partisan spirit which largely prevents bills being considered on their merit. Gentlemen on both sides of the House under these conditions vote "aye" and vote "no," or do not vote at all, not on the particular merits of the bill but with their party. That is inevitable under the conditions which have arisen, and this side of the House is obliged, because of the consumption of time by roll calls, to adopt rules which carry all bills under suspension. That allows no chance of amendment. It is a vicious practice, Mr. Speaker. I believe it is a most unfortunate condition, but it is forced on us. We have to pass the bills and this is the only way we can do it as long as half the day is spent in roll calls, and we can not allow the other side to say, "This bill which we wish to amend shall be subject to amendment, and the other bills, which Republicans are just as desirous of amending, and which just as much need it, shall not be amended." We have either to suspend the rules on all or suspend the rules on none. We can not play favorites, and particularly we can not show favoritism to that side which is causing the trouble. If we allowed that a minority would always filibuster.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. When I get through; I have not the time now. Therefore for gentlemen on that side to pretend that it is our fault that this one bill to which they are willing to give five hours is not amended is unfair. They know they leave us so little time that it is necessary to put all these bills through under suspension of the rules, and that we can not let them pick out any one for extra time. It involves a very unfortunate condition and it puts more power in the hands of the Speaker than I have ever known since I have been in Congress. I do not believe the Speaker wants it. I should suppose the Speaker would be very unwilling to have this great burden of deciding what bills should come up imposed upon him, and yet you have necessitated this.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if I have time when I have finished this line of thought I will yield. This legislation under suspension of the rules compels the majority of the House to pass very moderate bills. It does not allow us to go as far in many instances as the House would, because we are obliged to hold our majority fast. We are obliged to present bills which we are sure the majority will approve of. I think Members on both sides of the House often vote against their own inclination, for I know many Members on that side are voting to sustain their leader against their own desire and own judgment, and I have no doubt many Members on that side of the House vote sometimes against their own judgment. That is inevitable under this practice and the result follows—

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield—

Mr. GILLETT. I decline to yield; I have not the time—and the result follows as was illustrated in the bill of Saturday. With that bill, which as I said then would be very much improved if left open to amendment, it was necessary for the committee which reported it to bring in a bill which they were sure would be supported; not a radical bill, but a bill which the most conservative would approve, a very moderate step in the direction which we ought to have taken, for fear we could not pass the bill at all, and this is going to apply, I am sure, to a large part of the legislation here. It is going to be hampered by this condition which the gentlemen on that side of the House have imposed upon us of trying to say that the minority shall rule. Another result is that we are obliged to combine a great many bills in one omnibus bill in order to save time and the result of that is that many bills which would go through by unanimous consent are combined together and very likely there will creep in two or three bills which ordinarily would be objected to, but which under these conditions we can not vote down without voting down the whole omnibus bill, and therefore, in that way also, this Democratic filibuster is inevitably leading to vicious legislation.

So the Republican party is responsible, and must be responsible; but it seems to me it is obviously unfair, and, as I stated before, buncombe, for the Democratic party to claim that any one bill which they offer to give time for is put through in its present phase, not because of their filibuster, but because of our choice, and we can not take up one bill without taking up other bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the filibuster on the floor of this House control the majority in the committee? Did it control the Committee on the Judiciary that reported that bill the other day?

Mr. GILLETT. The majority of the committee knew that bill was to come in under a motion of suspension. They knew because of the filibuster it would not have the day's time which it ought to have, and therefore they had to frame the bill to meet the conditions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did they not fix the bill in the Republican way, fix it up to suit the Republicans by the Republican committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Mr. KIMBALL. I would like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. TAWNEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 140, nays 86, answered "present" 7, not voting 154, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. So the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21946, the general deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill. By order of the House, general debate has been closed; also by order of the House the first reading of the bill has been dispensed with, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1908, and for prior years, and for other objects hereinafter stated, namely:

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a brief statement to the committee regarding the provisions of this bill. The amount recommended in the bill is $17,342,572.89. Gentlemen will see from the report how this aggregate is distributed. You will find in the bill no illegal deficiency. The aggregate is large, but it is made up principally of four items, namely, $10,000,000 for pensions, made necessary by the passage of the widows' pension act at this session of Congress, and also because of the Bureau receiving and disposing of more pension claims under the act of February 6, 1907, than the Department estimated a year ago could be disposed of, and therefore the appropriation to meet and pay these claims is deficient.

The naval establishment has $3,156,000. Almost all of it is attributable to two causes. One is the pay of the Navy, or a deficiency in the annual appropriations for the pay of the Navy, aggregating $2,250,000; and the other is about $700,000 for the purchase and transportation of coal for the use of the fleet in its trip from San Francisco around the world to Hampton Roads.

I will say in this connection that the Chief of Bureau informed the committee that the aggregate cost of the coal consumed by the fleet on this trip from Hampton Roads until its return, including transportation, will aggregate about $5,000,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that simply the cost of the coal?

Mr. TAWNEY. The cost of the coal, including its transportation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That transportation is properly chargeable to the cost of the fuel?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; certainly.

The next item is for the military establishment, $1,310,000. A large part of that, in fact practically all of it, is due to the deficiency in the annual appropriation for pay of the Army—enlisted men of the Army and officers—and then a part of it is due to the deficiency occasioned by the act passed only a short time ago at this session, increasing the pay of enlisted men and officers, and this appropriation will provide for the increase during the remainder of this fiscal year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Speaking of the coal, I am reminded to ask the gentleman from Minnesota how much are the Suez Canal tolls?

Mr. TAWNEY. That question was gone into in the early part of the session on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and you will find it in the hearings on the first urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I could not state it exactly, but my best recollection is that it is something like $8,000 a vessel. That is the amount of the toll.

Now, the only other item of any consequence is the item of printing and binding, $732,000, and that is a legal deficiency, for the appropriation for printing and binding does not come within the antideficiency act. This deficiency arises out of the fact that a mistake was made in the estimates a year ago, and a less amount was estimated than was absolutely necessary to do the printing for the Departments and the printing for Congress, and it will require $732,000, of which $175,000, however, is a deficiency from the fiscal year 1907.

Then there are judgments of the Court of Claims, $894,000; judgments in Indian depredation cases, $114,000; judgments of the United States courts, $1,045, and audited accounts, which are certified in pursuance of law for appropriation, aggregating $299,151.93.

So that there is very little in the bill that involves deficiencies in annual appropriations made for the departmental service or for the service of the Government outside of the military and naval establishments, pensions, and the amounts necessary to pay judgments properly certified to Congress for payment. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the bill might be termed a "supplemental appropriation bill," made necessary by the enactment of legislation at the present session of Congress. That is all I desire to say unless some gentleman desires to ask me some question.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to submit a request. I desire to read to the House an address by the secretary of the Farmers' Union of Tennessee on cotton exchanges.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to read and have printed in the RECORD certain statements which he has described. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. SIMS. To read an address by the secretary of the Farmers' Union of Tennessee on cotton exchanges. There is nothing political in it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS read the address, as follows:

THE FARMER AND THE EXCHANGE.

To the honorable Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, we beg leave to submit the following for your consideration:

HOW THE EXCHANGE OPERATES.

For the making of future contracts a most elaborate and complete machine exists in what is known as the "clearing house" of the Cotton (dealing) Association. Through this clearing house or cotton exchange A sells to B a thousand bales of cotton which he may neither possess nor expect to possess. B may or may not want spot cotton at the time specified for delivery. The man who buys futures does not, as a rule, want the cotton. The man who sells futures does not, as a rule, expect or desire to deliver the cotton.

Once a week a committee adjusts what are called "settlement prices" of the different positions on the board. Supposing values have gone up during the week since contracts were made, say, one-fourth cent per pound, the seller is indebted to the buyer for that difference of a quarter cent; but if values have gone down the buyer is indebted to the seller, and the balance must be paid by the loser into the clearing house on the following Tuesday or the defaulter is posted.

To be "long" is to have bought; to be "short" is to have sold.

A deal may be "called" at any time by selling if you have bought, or buying if you have sold, an equal amount for same date of delivery, the difference being adjusted between date of first transaction and time of "call." The real value of cotton is not counted in the transaction unless the spot cotton is actually delivered.

Suppose I am an importer; I buy 1,000 bales of cotton through my agent and am notified by him; I find a customer; the cotton is shipped, and I proceed to sell futures to cover gross cost of cotton landed at place of delivery. I sell these futures of a "position" on time when actual cotton would be due to arrive and can be tendered against sale of futures and fulfill the future contract if necessary. If the price advances, I deliver on my contract sale and fail to get the rise in value—so it is of no consequence to me as an importer whether the price goes up or down. The difference between my contract sale and the gross cost is my profit.

If I sell a cargo on arrival at a depreciation in price, I would, simultaneously, buy the future hedge in the open market and play even.

Who sustains these losses?

The victims of the future market who take chances in hope of gain, who are in most cases those who do not handle cotton at all and can not, as a consequence, play even, as they have no spot cotton to balance against a future deal.

Suppose 1,000 bales are shipped and sold in small lots of 100 bales at different times, then 100 futures are bought at the same time that the hedge expires, and so on.

For carrying out these transactions the broker on exchange charges a commission of $15 per 100 bales, provided you are not a member of the exchange. If you are a member, you will have to pay only $7.50 per 100 bales. But this commission must be paid, no matter who wins or who loses. So the members of the exchange get their pay either way the market goes.

In the beginning of every new crop year prominent cotton factors, like the McFaddens, Inmans, or Farnsworth, who own in the South a large number of cotton gins and many cotton warehouses and compresses—so many of each as to nearly approach a trust—send out to their agents, located in all the principal cotton markets, orders to buy cotton. The price is usually based on Liverpool, New Orleans, Galveston, or some port market, less the freight to that point, or as much less as it can be bought for in the smaller markets. These agents receive so much per bale as a commission for buying. The custom is that as soon as an agent has made a purchase of any volume he will sell it to some exchange. At the same time he notifies McFadden, Inman, or Farnsworth of the contract. They, too, then sell to protect themselves and notify their Liverpool customers of the purchase of so many bales for their account, as the McFaddens, Inmans, and Farnsworth undertake to supply the spinners cotton on contract for any month in the year. These spinners in turn sell for their protection, claiming they want only a manufacturer's profit. This is what is termed "hedging." Here we have a sale of three or more bales of cotton on the speculative markets of the country to one of spot bought, and that, too, long before that one of spot is taken out of the visible supply. If the conditions seem favorable and the Government reports, due about this time, indicate a large crop, these natural bears on the market may sell ten to one bales of spot cotton bought. So the grower, instead of getting relief looking to better prices by the sale of his cotton to actual demand, has stimulated the future selling of it to enormous proportions.

The professionals in the market, the exchange manipulators who have purchased this cotton proceed to unload it on "the country"—so called. In this way we have this wire system as an auxiliary in the speculative trade.

You buy a paper contract, but do not pay full value for the cotton. You are required to put up anywhere from one to five dollars a bale, and on a hundred-bale contract with a few hundred dollars you can affect the price of $6,000 worth of cotton. So the buyer does not have to invest much money, nor pay interest, insurance, warehouse charges, etc. Many spinners have seats on the exchange either personally or by representatives. The exchange limits its membership and excludes anyone whom they wish. The brokers on the exchange charge a commission of $15 on the hundred bales to those not members of the exchange and $7.50 to the members. A seat on the New York Cotton Exchange costs $12,500 and is limited to 450 men. This cabal of financial pirates gather round the "pit" and hold high carnival as they gamble on values and send out to the world "quotations" which a blind public has been hypnotized to believe were real.

ESCROW.

If a corporation wishes to prevent unscrupulous brokers from underquoting its stock in the market there is a law provided for it by which the stockholders can escrow their shares and they are protected. The shareholders all sign an agreement that they will not sell for a given length of time, and for anyone to quote this escrowed stock lays him liable to prosecution.

Suppose the cotton farmer were to escrow his cotton at an agreed price and then prosecute every broker or cotton exchange that quoted cotton for sale which they did not have; they would be pursuing the tactics of corporation promoters.

Every business that does not add to the wealth and happiness of the world is a useless waste, therefore base, and should be suppressed. For me to buy 500 bales of cotton for May delivery through a cotton exchange, and the market to go against the seller, and I pocket the money put up on margin, is illegitimate for the simple reason that neither of us had performed a useful function. For one's gain to be another's loss is a speculation in fluctuations of value and in no wise legitimate speculation. The brokers on the exchange take the margin money and turn it over to the winner, less the commission charged for holding the stake and advertising the game.

With eighteen grades deliverable on the cotton exchange of New York, I can tender unspinnable cotton and depress the market. This fact being known very naturally places the future contract at a discount, and futures lead spots in the market. More cotton is reported as left over at the end of the cotton season at certain ports than the receipts amounted to during the entire year. Take New York for the cotton year of 1906-7, which had only 23,108 bales of receipts and had at the end of the year 109,975 bales left over. This unsalable stuff is carried over year after year to use on the exchange. When sales or purchases are made on the exchange, no specific grade is specified. It is simply so many bales. This feature alone places the transaction in the category of the purely speculative. If the gambling feature were eliminated, the so-called "legitimate feature" would not last thirty days.

To illustrate: If I am an exporter and sell 1,000 bales in March for October delivery, I turn around and purchase 1,000 bales on the exchange to be delivered at the same time. When the contract falls due I have bought my cotton and shipped to my foreign customer and I sell out my hedge. And who buys the hedge?

There is the rub.

Had I no one but genuine exporters and spinners to deal with I would find no market for my hedge. So I find it in the purely speculative operations on the exchange.

Futures are quoted in New York from 10 till 3 by wire, and in the afternoon at 2, after the great bulk of the future business is done for the day, they quote the price of spots. There may or may not have been an actual delivery of cotton, and yet the spot price be "marked down" because of a decline in futures. This is often the case. How can you quote the spot price of a thing that was not sold? It is done by "offers." The offer determines the spot value and they follow futures and futures follow the weather vane of speculation.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BUCKET SHOPS AND EXCHANGE.

The difference between a cotton exchange and a bucket shop is this: The bucket-shop keeper is a gambler at both ends of the line and holds the stake of the man who speculates with him and does not put up anything against it, while if you deal through the exchange they make you put up your money with a responsible party, and the one with whom you put up your wager places his with a responsible party, and when the time is called the winner banks the account.

DOES IT PREVENT FLUCTUATIONS?

Does the process of handling futures have a tendency to prevent fluctuations? Let's see. In February, 1904, the July option in New York sold as high as 17.55 cents. Before the month was out the July option sold as low as 13.02 cents. Over $20 fluctuation in that month—one hundred and fifty days ahead. How is that for a "protection" to the "legitimate" hedger? Now, did the spots tally with these futures when July finally arrived? The July futures opened by selling as low as 10.18 cents. From 17.15 cents in February there was a decline to 10.18 the first week in July. How is that for holding prices stable and putting a balance wheel on prices by the exchange?

The bucket shop could not exist twenty-four hours without the exchange as a basis of quotations, nor could the Liverpool exchange do business in this way if the American exchanges were abolished. Ac-

According to the best estimates the bucket shops took from the South $30,000,000 annually before they were outlawed. The local wire houses have been shut up in every cotton State save two, and these are certain to do the same. Since this source of revenue has been cut off the game has lost some of its sensational activity of bygone days. The tremendous efforts now being put forth to stem the tide of revolt against exchange methods is only additional evidence of the graft that it supports. Its defenders can not prove legitimate need for its existence, and it must needs go down, as did the lottery game and faro dealing of days gone by.

On the sworn testimony of exporters, cotton merchants, and manufacturers before the legislative committees of the general assemblies in some of the States the local cotton exchanges were not necessary adjuncts to the legitimate cotton trade, but were used only for convenience by the larger exchanges. The bucket shop has been likened to a crap shooter and the exchange to the stud-poker player with a fixed hand.

There is no exchange on wool or hay, and hay leads cotton in value. One of the most diabolical and insidious developments of the cotton trade is the tacit understanding among cotton speculators not to interfere with each other in certain territory. This unwritten law renders the producer helpless in trying to find a competitive market. Competition is eliminated and prices held down by concert of action that operates in restraint of trade beyond the reach of all the antitrust laws that can be enacted.

The exchange furnishes the means of guaranty to the speculator, and the victims of the exchange furnish the reservoir where margins are ever on tap for the exporter and speculator. If exporters and spot dealers could hedge only with each other, it would narrow the market till it would go out of use for want of customers.

The exchange, by furnishing this means of insurance for the speculator, stands as a wall between the cotton raisers and the spinners. Contracts are made with spinners and the hedge resorted to as an insurance against losses, and the farmer is blocked from making direct deals. The spinner does not bother to hunt for his supplies, as he is depending on his contracts. Thus we find "closer trade relationship" is impossible so long as the exchange holds sway.

It can be proven that cotton factors like the McFaddens, Inmans, and Farnsworth make more money dealing in futures than their commissions in legitimate orders from the manufacturers and millers would be were they debarred from hedging.

Suppose a man "saves" himself by "hedging" on futures. Somebody had to lose to keep him even. Nothing is gained to society. No wealth is added to the country. One might as well swap dollars from one pocket to another as for one man's gain to be another's loss, so far as society at large is concerned.

To argue that legitimate business to-day is dependent upon a species of gambling is a travesty on reason, a stigma on business integrity, a burlesque on enterprise, and, if a fact, would be a monstrosity in civilization.

The opponents of this measure for the abolition of the exchange argue from the standpoint that the producer is dependent upon the street buyer for a market, which is no longer true, if it ever was. Does anyone think for a moment that to stop dealing in futures would stop demand for such things as are speculated on by the future-dealing process? If it would not, then it must be admitted that some other method would be found whereby the exchange would be arranged between the producer and consumer. And the other method is what the opponents of this measure object to.

Suppose some one will have to change his occupation; that will be nothing new under the sun. Coal oil put the candle-mold maker out of business. The locomotive put the stagecoach manufacturer out of business. The self-binder put the reap hook and cradle into the junk heap. The makers of shrines and gods were put out of business by the missionaries of the Christian religion, although the defenders of the old worship hired mobs to go up and down the streets of Ephesus crying: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

The farmers have decided to be their own salesmen and regulate supply to demand throughout the year, and they do not want the disturbing element of speculation to come in and make this adjustment the more difficult. Fictitious prices on fictitious commodities have no place in legitimate business.

No antitrust legislation had been enacted in any of the Southern States prior to January, 1905, and still we had more severe fluctuations in the price than we have recently had. Take the history of the cotton market for the past twenty-five years and you will find that it is the rule and not the exception for the price of cotton to decline violently between September 1 and December 1 of each year. You can not deceive the cotton farmers by telling them that the enactment of law to suppress gambling in cotton is responsible for the decline in the price of cotton. They have many times before any of the said laws were enacted seen the price of cotton decline violently with no more cause than has lately prevailed.

Abolishing the cotton exchange will not lessen the demand for cotton goods. If the demand for cotton goods is not affected by the abolition of the exchanges, the demand for raw cotton will in no way be lessened. The demand for cotton remaining the same the price should not be affected, unless there should be a difference in the cost of getting cotton from the producer to the spinner after the abolition of the cotton exchanges.

The farmers are organized and are in a position to furnish at established grades and prices all the cotton raised in the United States by simply filling the orders sent in by the spinners. The producers are in a position to guarantee their shipments to be as represented and furnish as good security as any of the present shippers can possibly do.

There can be no cheaper or more economical way of handling cotton from the producer to the spinner. The organized producers do this through central sales offices incorporated and capitalized for this special purpose.

Should cotton rise in price after the abolition of the exchange, the producer will be the beneficiary instead of the speculators. If the price goes down, the consumers of cotton goods will not object, and the loss will not be sustained by victims of the "future" market when caught on the losing side of the game.

Cotton exchanges feed on speculation. All kinds of speculation feed on fluctuation in price.

There can be no speculation where there is absolute stability of values. The direct result of speculation is fluctuation.

So we have it that speculation produces fluctuations, and fluctuations furnish the inducements for speculations. Each feeds the other.

WILL INTERFERE WITH BUSINESS.

The cry that to abolish the exchange would demoralize the business is the same that was raised against the President for exposing the operations of predatory manipulators of finance.

The business that it will interfere with needs to be interfered with. Other channels are ready to take care of the trade, with which we deal further on.

The press of the country has been filled with articles defending speculation on general principles, and the exchange in particular. The whole tendency of these articles is to confuse and confound all kinds of speculation with legitimate investments that carry with them an element of risk. We are accused of confusing speculations with gambling, which we deny, and turn the accusation back to them. Bucket-shop investment is betting on the rise and fall of quotations. Future hedging is the same when no delivery is made. And when these transactions are confused with ordinary investments that are in any sense a risk is to deliberately defend gambling as entirely legitimate and in no sense reprehensible. In this kind of so-called "business" the information, foresight, and private knowledge necessary to be successful can never belong to but a few of the elect, who have nothing else to do but study and operate the tricks of trade. Theodore Price has 3,450 special correspondents and 5,000 general correspondents from whom he gets information. The enormous expense necessary to conduct this system must be met by inside advantages enjoyed by the trade.

What does it cost to market a crop of cotton by present methods? Let the ledgers of the brokers, commission men, speculators, exporters, bucket shops, and exchanges tell the tale. When 12,000,000 bales are sold before made, is it not evident that each buyer will be a bear?

The farmer who sold cotton last fall during the panic had to pay a privilege tax of from 2½ to 5 per cent for marketing his crop. Banks had suspended payment, and cotton buyers had to buy their money and pay brokerage charges of usually 3 per cent, and of course they deducted it from the price. Latham, Alexander & Co., of New York, sold money for this purpose. Latham, Alexander & Co. are heavy bankers. Latham, Alexander & Co. are supposed to be heavy dealers in cotton. One need not read between the lines unless one wants to.

AS A MORAL ISSUE.

If all the wealth absorbed by exploiters, if all the money lost by those who have staked it on futures was restored to the original owners, the magic of the change would startle the world. The system has blighted homes, destroyed business, wrecked banks, sent men raving to the madhouse, and others reeling into a suicide's grave. Those who win on the exchange are usually rendered unfit for the slow and common ways of earning a livelihood. Their success excites the cupidity of others who rush in and stake their chances and lose. The ones who win attract attention, but those who lose suffer in silence, ashamed of themselves, and are soon forgotten. Its victims are numbered in every county in the South. Take an innocent soul, uninitiated in the ways of high-fung finance as run by the buccaners of commercial graft and let him view the scenes enacted on the floors of the exchanges at the height of their gala days of frenzied speculation, and his blood will run cold at the scenes there presented. Men in tailored suits, with canes, patent leathers, silk hats, and diamond studs pace the floor in nervous suspense as they watch the chalk marks on the board come and go. Excitement pervades the arena. Look! A plug hat is slammed against the floor and stamped, the man tears open his collar, clutches his hair, pulls out handkerchiefs and strews it on the floor, and reels into the street in the agony of despair. He is a ruined man—the chalk marks went against him—he lost all.

VIEWS OF PROMINENT MEN.

At the Atlanta meeting, in October, 1907, a member of the New York Exchange said that they bought and sold in spot cotton during a season about 70,000 bales and bought and sold in "futures" over a hundred million bales.

In July, 1904, Mr. Macara, of Manchester, the president of the International Manufacturers' Association, said that the manufacturers paid for the crop of 1903 enough more than the farmer got to duplicate all the factories in Great Britain.

Mr. Coats, of Manchester, England, president of the Cooperative Manufacturers' Association, representing 6,000,000 spindles, said in an address before the convention of the spinners of the world and the cotton producers of the United States in Atlanta, Ga., October 7-9, 1907, that 90 per cent of the business of the cotton exchange was evil, and unless the evil could be eliminated and the good retained, that it had better be abolished.

C. W. Smith, of England, says:

"We demand that the prices of the world's commodities shall in the future be governed by the economic laws of the world's supply and demand, and not as at present and in the past, by bull and bear gambling operations in nonexistent products and by the manipulators thereof, for the sole benefit of the gamblers, through options and future contracts. Surely all governments will see there is nothing but absolute justice in these propositions. The course of prices for agricultural products should be fixed in the future, so far as possible, through the medium of the producer."

"Further, it is by such deadly 'bull and bear' international gambling weapons that these men have also cunningly and secretly obtained the key to the financial, agricultural, and commercial conquest of the world. I maintain I have ample justification in denouncing international financial and commercial gambling in 'options and futures' as standing out as the greatest of all perils which the world has to contend with in the future, in the connection with preserving the rights of the property, as well as upholding the liberty and privileges of the people."

Congressman W. P. HEPBURN, of Iowa, recently said: "Is it at all probable that business men would pay $75,000 or $100,000 for a seat on the New York Exchange if there was not a prospect of great returns? Would dozens of brokers, who own these priceless seats, maintain thousands of miles of private wires at a cost of thousands of dollars per month if there was not the sure-thing gamblers' profit in sight? Would they buy these seats of gold and wires of unknown cost if they were only buying and selling stocks in a legitimate manner?"

"All the race-track gambling in the world; all the games of cards in the 'tenderloins' and the 'red-light districts' of the cities; all the games of chance at Monte Carlo and the other famous gambling resorts of the world are as drops in the bucket compared with the enormous transactions of the stock exchanges of the United States. During the year of 1906 the banks of New York made 4,000,000,000 separate loans on account of stocks."

"I will venture to say that not 5 per cent of these transactions on the New York Stock Exchange are legitimate transfers of stock."

Mr. HEPBURN had reference to stock exchanges in general, but the cotton exchange is as reprehensible a branch of the business as there is connected with the whole system.

The Saturday Evening Post, in a recent editorial, said:

"First and last, a lot of money is made out of this gambling. Otherwise it would not continue. Whether the bull finally gets this money, or the bear, or simply the broker, does not matter. Whoever gets it does not earn a penny of it. He does not produce or transport or distribute a bushel of grain or a pound of cotton. He contributes absolutely nothing to industry itself. He merely sits aside and bets on it. So that the money is made in speculation; whatever the amount and whoever receives it, it is just so much scooped out of the wealth that the country produces, with no return on the scooper's part."

Doctor Johnson defines a stockjobber as a "low wretch who gets the money by buying and selling shares in the funds."

Washington said speculation was the cause of decay of public virtue, and expressed huge contempt for stockjobbers.

Macaulay speaks of the ill fame of the stockjobber in his day. Napoleon said that anyone that sold national securities short was a traitor to the state.

President Roosevelt has asked Congress to do something to prevent the grosser forms of gambling—such as making large sales of what men do not possess.

William Jennings Bryan said in a speech in New York, in March, 1908, "measured by the number of suicides caused by the New York exchanges, Monte Carlo is an innocent pleasure resort by comparison, and the men who operated the Louisiana Lottery never did a tithe of the harm that grain gamblers, cotton gamblers, and stock gamblers of New York do every day."

Speculation as carried on through the stock exchanges debauches manhood, robs society, performs no useful function, destroys stability of values, and stands as a perpetual menace to the producer.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE EXCHANGE.

We do not propose to overthrow a system so extended in its operations without inaugurating a better one. Our object is to economize the handling and marketing of cotton, eliminate the evils of speculation, and avoid the instability of values incident thereto without jeopardizing the interest of the producer and consumer.

The argument is made that to abolish the exchange would seriously hamper the cotton trade and leave the farmer at sea on prices. That cotton would sell at widely different prices the same time at different places. That it would leave the farmer and spinner without a medium or transfer, as it requires expert knowledge to distribute cotton properly to suit the peculiar requirements of the thousands of mills.

This might have been the condition in the past, but it is no longer so. The farmer has organized—2,000,000 strong.

The cotton raiser has prepared for the change before he asked for relief from the system he is laying aside.

The farmers have built 2,000 warehouses for storing their cotton. They have established and incorporated central sales offices where any cotton in the United States can be bought on grades and guaranteed, and sold at prices governed by demand. These warehouses and central sales offices are owned and controlled exclusively by the farmers. The managers are hired by the year on salary and placed under surety bonds. Samples are sent from the warehouses to these central offices and guaranteed to correctly represent the bales from which they were drawn. These samples are classified and a record made of same. The prices are made to be uniform throughout the cotton belt by agreement, and these offices are in constant communication with each other. Spot cotton is sold from these offices for future delivery, but no cotton is sold before it is made.

The organization that has brought about this system is the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, and by its authority this address is respectfully submitted for your consideration.

The exchanges, brokers, commission men, and speculators are jealous of the rising power of the farmer, and that is the secret of their tender solicitation for his welfare. The only legitimate exchange is the kind the farmers have established. They do not hedge nor create a condition that requires it. They deal in spots and have the goods.

T. J. BROOKS, Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have glanced at the deficiency bill this morning. Is it composed exclusively of items that have been audited by the Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. There is an item of audited accounts, $290,151.93. These are audited accounts that are certified by authority of law to Congress every year from the Departments. They are accounts that have passed through the hands of the Auditor and have been audited, but there is no appropriation with which to pay them. The other items in the bill are not audited accounts, except where deficiencies have been ascertained for particular years. If there is a deficiency, for instance, for 1905, in an annual appropriation, that is an ascertained deficiency and the amount chargeable to that appropriation has been audited, but because of the lapse of time the appropriation has passed into the Treasury and there is no money with which to meet the deficiency.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand that. Now, deficiency appropriations made for the current fiscal year are anticipated?

Mr. TAWNEY. Some of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And deficiencies will occur if they keep the present force, and, therefore, some are anticipated?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; some are anticipated, and in other cases there is a deficiency now.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROBERTS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CHOCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16882) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OWEN, Mr. CLAPP, and Mr. CURTIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4341. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn;

S. 5412. An act granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Mitchell; and

S. 7123. An act granting an increase of pension to Harry S. Lee, formerly Albert Lee Alleman.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply want to say a word in corroboration of what the gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the committee, has said. I think a close inspection of this bill will show every Member of the House that the committee has been diligent to see that nothing but items in the nature of a general deficiency has gone into the bill. More than $15,000,000 of the bill, as the chairman says, are made necessary by legislation enacted at this session of Congress, leaving a little over $2,000,000 for general deficiencies proper, and this is largely accounted for by accounts that have been audited by heads of the different Departments, and therefore stand in the same position practically as the judgment of a court.

The committee has been most diligent in seeing that deficiencies that were not properly deficiencies were eliminated from the bill, and have only reported to the House what they felt had to be provided for under existing law. It is the most economical bill, in my judgment, that has been reported to Congress, and if other appropriation bills had adhered as rigidly to economical lines as have been used in the appropriations reported in this bill, the total appropriations at this session of Congress would have been largely decreased from the enormous totals we find them to-day.

Mr. RHINOCK. Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the House, I ask your indulgence while I discuss a question of most vital importance, and especially so to the tobacco growers of Kentucky and other States whose farmers are engaged in the production of this article and to the consumers of tobacco all over the country. During the present session of Congress I introduced a bill which reads as follows:

A bill for the relief of tobacco growers.

Be it enacted, etc., That unstemmed tobacco in the natural leaf, or stemmed tobacco in the natural leaf, or natural-leaf tobacco in the hand twist, which tobacco is not adulterated in any way, shall not be subject to any internal-revenue tax or charge of any kind whatsoever; and it shall be lawful for any person to buy and sell such unstemmed tobacco in the natural leaf, or natural-leaf tobacco in the hand twist, which said tobacco is not adulterated, without the payment of any tax whatever. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

This measure will, in my opinion, if enacted into law, settle the strife now being bitterly waged between the tobacco growers and the tobacco trusts. The sum and substance of this measure is to put the grower of tobacco on the same footing as the grower of cotton, corn, wheat, oats, and all other products that come out of the ground. Is there anything wrong in this proposition? Why should the Government say to the producers of cotton, corn, wheat, oats, and all the other products that come out of the ground, "Go seek the markets of the world, unhampered and unrestricted," but the tobacco grower must pay the Government 6 cents a pound for the poor privilege of preparing the product of his labor and the sweat of his brow into a convenient, merchantable shape to reach the consumer. Is not that discrimination? It ill becomes this Government, Mr. Chairman, to make war on others for discrimination until it ceases to engage in the same business. [Applause.]

That the effect of the revenue laws relating to tobacco has been to bring to the verge of ruin one of the richest countries God has made, destructively damaging to landlords and farmers, distressingly impoverishing to tenants and laborers, by placing it within the power of buyers and corporations to fix the price and combine to control it; that no other country in the United States has been so oppressed, having its natural fertility and wealth-producing powers rendered nil; that no other product of the soil is thus taxed and singled out for trusts to prey upon; that no other people are ground to poverty between the upper and nether millstone of government and monopoly.

That the effect of the law is to destroy competition among buyers and limit the growers' market; that if the grower were permitted to stem and twist his product and sell it in any quantity anywhere, in any quantity to anybody, he could thus reach the consumer, and there would result a wider market, competitive demand, and living prices.

That under the prevailing system the grower can only sell a small quantity in the hand; that all the people about him to whom he might sell are growers like himself, or nearly all, and therefore he has no one to whom he might sell; that the small quantity he might sell would not justify him going into nontobacco regions to find customers; that he therefore has no one else to sell his crop to except the combined agents; that there is no longer competition in buying, the leading tobacco markets of the world have been abandoned by the army of buyers and agents from abroad, from all the principal countries of Europe, who sat daily around the tobacco boards and bid against each other; that the auction rooms are dismantled and abandoned, and where activity and prosperity once surged is now desolation and emptiness; that a few buyers for corporations, all in combination, alone remain to fix the price and take as much or as little as they wish; that there is no one else to whom they may sell—no exemption, no rivalry—and the result is that prices rule barely above the starvation point.

That the revenue law is directly responsible for this by depriving the grower of the right to sell his product to consumers stemmed and twisted into a shape that can be handled and used and in amount that would be any considerable part of the country's product; that to take off the handcuffs and allow him to stem and twist and sell it without limitation will create competition and bring tobacco to its worth.

That it is demonstrable, at least in the tobacco regions that we represent, that this suggestion will not decrease the revenues; but even if it does, even if it cost millions, is the Government warranted in punishing its people for revenue? Is it fair and just to select us from among all other tillers of the soil for unmerited punishment through unjust taxation?

I am asked why, if this tax is such a hardship, relief has not been asked for before this time. I will tell you. In the first place, the tobacco-tax question has been agitated more or less for the last twenty years, but that you may understand the deplorable condition under which the grower of tobacco now labors and the combination of circumstances, or I might say, the artificial means used, by which every grower of tobacco is reduced to a condition of serfdom which is becoming unbearable and which ought not to be allowed to exist in any government, and which will continue indefinitely unless relief by the passage of a measure which will take Government restrictions, regulations, and tax off of the product in its raw or unadulterated state in any form—in other words, give tobacco the same rights and privileges that corn, wheat, cotton, and other products of the earth now enjoy—it would be necessary for me to refer you to the conditions existing before the organization of the tobacco trust and a brief summary of the history of that organization and its present method of doing business.

A few years ago the manufacture of tobacco in all of its forms and the sale of the manufactured article was in the hands of many thousand different individuals and corporations, each competing with the other in the purchase of the raw material and the sale of the manufactured article. Prices then were controlled alone by the law of supply and demand, and the growers received a fair price for their labor and a reasonable income on the capital invested, and the consumer only paid a fair price for the manufactured article.

In 1890 the American Tobacco Company was organized under the laws of New Jersey, with an immense capital, for the ostensible purpose of manufacturing tobacco in all of its forms, but with the real design of crushing out all competition in buying tobacco in its raw condition and in selling the manufactured article. How well it succeeded the present condition of the tobacco business and the general uprising of the people in opposition to the methods of the trust clearly indicate. Immediately after its organization it began to purchase competing tobacco factories in this and foreign countries, and paying for them in stock in the new concern at fabulous prices, many times more than these factories were worth. It engaged in the manufacture of tobacco in competition with other factories, and as it progressed in business whenever a formidable competitor was encountered it would be offered the alternative of favorable inducements to join the trusts or forced into bankruptcy by ruinous competition.

In December, 1898, a similar concern was organized under the laws of New Jersey, known as the "Continental Tobacco Company," with a capital equally as great as the American Tobacco Company, which engaged in the business of absorbing minor factories in the same way as the American had done. While the Continental was apparently a competitor of the American, yet it was known that the promoters of the Continental were the same as the organizers of the American.

These two concerns continued as separate organizations until June, 1901, when another corporation, known as the "Consolidated Tobacco Company," was organized by the same persons and for the same purposes that its predecessors had been formed, with a capital representing more millions than was ever conceived of by the Count of Monte Cristo in his wildest hallucinations.

A short time after the organization of the Consolidated Tobacco Company it acquired 88 and 90 per cent of the common stock of the American and Continental companies, respectively, which gave it control of these concerns, with all the factories engaged in the manufacture of plug, smoking tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and the wholesale and retail establishments engaged in selling tobacco, cigars, snuff, and so forth, which they had acquired. After this gigantic combination was formed the Consolidated Tobacco Company began a war of extermination against all independent factories which had not been absorbed by the American and Continental companies, and which were liable to compete with it in business.

In a short time a great majority of these independent concerns were either driven out of business or were forced to sell their plants to the trust, the result of which was that at the close of the year 1901 the Consolidated Tobacco Company owned and had control of 90 per cent of all the tobacco factories engaged in the manufacture of tobacco in any form in the United States and in many foreign countries.

The capital stock of this colossal combination, including stock of minor corporations owned and controlled by it, amounted to one-half billion of dollars. How much of this was watered stock no one other than the promoters will ever know, and they will never tell. Notwithstanding this unheard-of capitalization, this gigantic concern, in December, 1901, less than seven months after its organization, declared and paid a dividend of 20 per cent on its entire capital stock, and this, it will be remembered, was shortly after the close of the Spanish-American war, when the tax on manufactured tobacco was 12 cents per pound, and since the reduction of the tax from 12 to 6 cents per pound the trust has made no change in the price it pays for the raw tobacco or the price at which it sells the manufactured article.

To enable this corporation to make an annual dividend equal to one-fifth of its entire capitalization, real and fictitious, the trust forces the growers to sell their tobacco to it at less than the cost of production, with labor at from 50 to 75 cents per day, and sells the manufactured article to the consumer at from six to ten times more than it allows the growers for it. When it is understood that in the manufacture of tobacco a large amount of cheap, low-grade sugar, molasses, and licorice, worth only a few cents per pound, is worked into the raw material to make the manufactured article, some idea of the immense profits realized by the trust may be understood.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that you may have some conception of the character of the men and the methods they employ in incubating this hydra-headed monster that has so ruthlessly, willfully, and maliciously robbed, pillaged, and plundered the public producers and consumers and driven the tobacco growers to a state of almost revolution [applause on the Democratic side], I quote to you a history of this organization, by Charles Edward Russell, in Everybody's Magazine.

This institution dates back to 1890 and really owes its existence to the growth of the cigarette habit that infested this country after the Centennial Exposition of 1876, when the cigarette was obligingly exhibited to us by some of our admired foreign visitors. By 1885 many houses were engaged in supplying the rapidly growing demand. These houses competed, and, in the end extravagantly, so that none of them could make money. Five of the leading cigarette-making firms, to wit, W. Duke Sons & Co., of Durham, N. C.; Allen & Ginter, of Richmond; Goodwin & Co. and the Kinney Tobacco Company, of New York; W. S. Kimball & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., and Oxford, N. C., met in New York in January, 1890, to consider ways of limiting competition. With no intention to speak unfairly or disparagingly, I suppose it was as commonplace a lot of men as ever got together. Some of them had been in business a very long time and had nothing to show but mortgages and harassing debts, and at least one of them was hard upon the shoal of practical bankruptcy.

But they met and stumbled upon a plan of organization, modeled baldly upon a hundred other such combinations then and now in existence. This American Tobacco Company was launched (congenially) in New Jersey, where it put to sea January 31, 1890. Capital, $25,000,000; assets, chiefly speculative and paper; investment, nothing—literally nothing—for the men that formed the company did not contribute one cent of money to it. They put in their respective and unprofitable businesses, but these, while important to the total cigarette product of the country, were trifling compared with the total tobacco manufacture. Of the capital stock, $2,000,000 was set aside for what were called the "live assets" of the five combining firms. Nobody ever knew what "live assets" meant, for the total real estate, free and mortgaged, of all the firms—if you will believe me—amounted to less than $400,000, and none of them being financially prosperous, there was, strictly speaking, little to base solid securities upon. The remaining $23,000,000 of stock was distributed among the firms. As an illustration of the ability, energy, and foresight that characterized these proceedings, I may mention that the apportionment of stock was effected by the gentlemen present writing figures on slips of paper that were deposited in a hat, shaken, and drawn out; and, lest it be doubted that such a performance be possible in high finance, I add that it has been solemnly sworn to by men that took part in it.

Upon the slips being drawn from the hat, the Duke firm and Allen & Ginter received the largest allotments, the Kinney Company less, and the remaining concerns secured only $2,499,000 each.

The firms then put part of their holdings on the market, which they could easily do without impairing their control of the enterprise. They found that the public could be induced to buy the stock at 117. In a day, therefore, without effort, without investment, without expenditure or risk, they had been presented with millions and had still their business exactly as before, only better, because now competition among them was eliminated.

From the first the new trust was blessed with a singular and certain instrument of prosperity that lay in a fixed habit of the American cigarette smoker. No cigarette consumer ever went into a shop and asked merely for a package of cigarettes, but invariably he demanded a certain brand. As a rule he would not be content with anything but this brand; hence, every dealer was compelled to maintain stocks of all the brands most called for.

This one little fact made treasures for the American Tobacco trust, and would have made them if the managers of the trust had been wholly incompetent. The trust controlled the supplies of many of the most popular brands—"Sweet Caporal," "Old Judge," "Richmond Straight Cut," and the like. Dealers must have these or cease from business. Here was a power incalculable. The trust was engaged in suppressing its competitors. Any dealer that would not help its cause it could practically ruin by refusing to sell him the goods he must have.

Another powerful factor making for its prosperity lay in the opportunities to affect its securities in the stock market, of which it may be well to cite here one illustration from the records. In December, 1895, after a meeting of the directors of the American Tobacco Company, it was announced to the public that, owing to the unsatisfactory condition of the business, the usual semiannual dividend must needs be passed. Instantly, down crashed the stock, the price declining in a few days from 117 to 63, assisted in its downward course by the gloomy statements of the men on the inside of the company's affairs.

When the stock would decline no more, the men on the inside loaded up with all of the stock they could get at bottom prices.

Soon after the directors met and declared a cash dividend of 20 per cent, and a scrip (watered stock) dividend of another 20 per cent.

At this astounding news the stock rose with a bound. Up and up it went among the stars, flying higher day by day. When it hovered at 180 or thereabouts the men on the inside unloaded the stock they had bought at 63 and reaped large profits.

The scrip they had issued as a dividend bore 6 per cent interest guaranteed. Its only purpose was that the men in charge of the property should make to themselves a present of millions out of the enforced contributions of tobacco consumers and retailers.

Repeated financiering of this kind gave to the stock a bad name among conservative brokers and bankers, who looked upon it with unensiveness and rejected it as collateral except upon great margins. But the operation drew additional strength for the American Tobacco Company as one competitor after another was allured by these fabulous profits.

There were still left many strong competitors that would not surrender to either force or allurements, and most prominent among them was the great Liggett & Myers firm, of St. Louis. Against these opponents the trust waged a long, bitter, and costly war. The scope of its operations had been greatly enlarged by the firms that had joined it; smoking and chewing tobacco had been added, and later it absorbed the snuff and cigar industries. But the hot center of its fight with Liggett & Myers continued to be over plug tobacco.

Liggett & Myers had a brand of plug tobacco called "Star," which was very popular. To oppose this, the trust put forth a brand called "Battle Axe," and to push "Battle Axe" into favor and out the "Star" the trust lost $1,000,000 a year.

The president of the American Tobacco Company and the originator of the brilliant "Battle Axe" idea was J. B. Duke. The treasurer was George Arents, of the brokerage firm of Arents & Young, Wall street. Early in 1898 James R. Keene gathered certain facts in regard to the company's business and politics and concluded that the losses had been great and unnecessary, and that if the $1,000,000 a year "Battle Axe" drain were eliminated and the enterprise put upon a straight business basis the company could water its stock to the extent of doubling its capitalization and could still make 10 per cent dividends.

As to Liggett & Myers, Keene learned that the warfare was wholly needless, because Liggett & Myers would consent to a union of plug manufacturers, providing the officers of the American Tobacco Company had nothing to do with it. Keene determined to secure a majority of the $17,900,000 of the common stock of the American Tobacco Company, with enough of the preferred to give control of the property, then to depose Duke and Arents, organize a new concern, to be called the Continental Tobacco Company, so as to take in Liggett & Myers, P. J. Sorg, the Drummond Tobacco Company, and other producers of plug, and thus gain peacefully and inexpensively the ends that the blundering trust was trying to secure with war and money.

Mr. Keene brought in to help him Oliver H. Payne, of the Standard Oil crowd, who was William C. Whitney's brother-in-law; Herbert C. Terrell, afterwards confidential attorney for the president of the sugar trust, and Moore & Schley. It was just before the Spanish-American war, and the whole market was depressed. Mr. Keene and his associates went quietly at work and so adroitly gathered in the stock that the men on the inside of the company's affairs never suspected what was happening. When the books closed and the happy gentlemen suddenly awoke to find themselves defeated and menaced with the imminent loss of their ship the price of the common stock roamed as high as $800 for 100 shares overnight—that is, for the leasing of stock for election purposes.

The Keene associates got the bulk of their stock at about 90. Their purpose was to put it up to 200 and then issue the water. It rose rapidly to well above par and all looked favorable for plan and planners. Keene's first determination, upon which he was wholly fixed, was to remove Duke and Arents. He was in daily conference at Moore & Schley's office with members of that firm, with Colonel Payne, and with Mr. Terrell. When they were ready one day they called in Captain Duke and told him that he was deposed.

Mr. Duke is a person of some temper, and, in violation of the accepted rules of the game, he let his feelings get the better of him, which was probably well for him on this occasion. He made one leap into the center of the group and denounced the whole scheme. They had him in their grip so far as the captivity was concerned; he knew that. But he could make a lot of trouble for that ship and probably scuttle her, and he vehemently swore he would do it. He said that he would not only throw overboard all the American Tobacco stock that he held (which would be exceedingly bad for those trying to put the price up to 200), but he would get a new ship of his own and compete in the cigarette business.

Perhaps his violence frightened somebody; perhaps there were more plottings involved than those of Keene. Anyway, Moore & Schley and Terrell & Payne cast in their lot with Captain Duke. At this unexpected turn of affairs Keene surrendered the part of his scheme that contemplated the marooning of Duke and Arents and a new bargain was struck that dealt only with the manipulating of the stock.

To this work Keene now turned his attention, intending to put the stock up to 200, and telling his friends that this was the opportunity of a lifetime, which it certainly seemed to be. But somehow the stock did not go up. Mr. Keene chafed and fumed daily to Moore & Schley, and daily he was regaled with reasons. When his patience had been exhausted he announced that he would put the stock up on his own account without anybody's assistance. Whereupon $3,100,000 of the common stock that was in the treasury of the American Tobacco Company was issued to Moore & Schley at 108½, which was than the market price, and immediately and rapidly the stock was advanced until it reached 150.

But here another row broke out among the new associates. Keene declared that some one in the Moore & Schley end of the compact was secretly selling his stock at 150 instead of holding it until it should reach 200, which was the agreement. Of course, so long as insiders let their stock go at 150, it was useless to talk of putting the thing above that figure. Keene accused Moore & Schley, and was in turn charged with treachery. In the end Keene threw over the whole venture. Within two days he sold all his tobacco stock for what he could get, from 147½ down to 132½, clearing about $1,250,000, but missing the monstrous harvests that he had expected from the stock-watering. He was out, but Payne and the Standard Oil crowd were in, and stayed in, and that is where Standard Oil influence in the Tobacco Trust began. Payne had snapped up most of Keene's stock.

But now the new crowd that surrounded Captain Duke turned back joyously to the original scheme of watering the stock. The capitalization of American Tobacco was doubled. Pretty soon it was still further increased. The Continental Tobacco Company was organized and took in all the plug tobacco manufacturers except Liggett & Myers, who absolutely refused to ship under Captain Duke. Various devices were adopted to swell still further the enormous capitalization without seeming to increase it, devices like the subsidiary company and the holding company. The American Snuff Company was formed to establish a monopoly in the snuff business, and the American Cigar Company to monopolize cigar making. Every time the capital was increased, a heavier tribute was imposed upon retailer and consumer. After some years it occurred to the gentleman in actual charge of the trust that one source of profit had been overlooked, and thereafter the tobacco producer began to feel a steady contraction of the market and a decline of the prices that he obtained.

Meantime, Mr. Ryan and his friends had noted well the progress of the tobacco trust, and at the beginning of 1899 they seem to have thought that the time had come for them to participate in this good thing. Accordingly, they organized the Union Tobacco Company of New Jersey. Old friends of ours appear in the list of incorporators—Thomas F. Ryan, P. A. B. Widener, W. L. Elkins, Thomas Dolan, and R. A. C. Smith, and with gratification we may observe that the new enterprise had the sage advice and directing counsel of Elihu Root, now Secretary of State of this nation, then confidential adviser of Thomas F. Ryan.

The capital stock of the Union Tobacco Company was $10,000,000 of which, kindly note, only $1,350,000 was ever paid for. The news of its forming occasioned many painful moments on board Captain Duke's ship. The navigators there easily foresaw trouble. Mr. Ryan and his friends quickly found the talent necessary to embark on a large scale in the cigarette and tobacco business. Among the experienced men that they secured was William H. Butler, who had been vice-president of the American Tobacco Company and the originator of the "Sweet Caporal" cigarette. It was evident, therefore, that the Union Tobacco Company was equipped for formidable rivalry. Besides, the making and selling of tobacco was only a part of the business of the American Tobacco Company. Manufacturing was a good cover to the issuing and manipulating of securities from which the bulk of the great profits were derived, and the men in the Duke party knew very well that in the issuing and manipulating of securities the Ryan-Widener-Elkins-Root syndicate had no equals in the world; also that to such experts $10,000,000 of capital was as good a foundation as $100,000,000. A still greater danger lay in the proved and unequal power of the Ryan party to influence legislation and manipulate Government—a matter of the first importance to the trust's welfare.

The first moves by the Union Tobacco Company were very disconcerting. It began by operating on a bold and big scale the institution known as the "subsidiary company," and showed the Duke party how much had been overlooked concerning that device.

The exact method by which the subsidiary company device is worked I can show best by relating a particular instance. One of the firms that had remained outside of the trust and continued to fight it was W. T. Blackwell & Co., of Durham, N. C., makers of smoking tobacco. The Ryan-Widener-Root syndicate bought out W. T. Blackwell & Co. for $2,300,000. They then formed the Blackwell Tobacco Company as a subsidiary concern of the Union Tobacco Company and capitalized it at $9,000,000. They then sold to the public at par $6,800,000 of this stock, retaining the rest for their own purposes. The net result of this transaction was that they had secured a profit of $4,500,000 in cash and yet had $2,200,000 in stock.

These operations caused additional misery to Captain Duke and his friends. In making of something out of nothing they had been enormously successful, and yet, it must be admitted, in a crude and blundering way. Opposed to them were men that had been all their lives engaged in making something from nothing and had shown in the process both finesse and industry. From the Duke ship the outlook seemed stormy indeed. Meanwhile the Ryan-Root syndicate proclaimed that it proposed to press resolutely ahead and to compete vigorously in every department of the tobacco trade. With hand upon heart, so to speak, it declared to the public that its one dear object was to combat monopoly. Before the agonized gaze of the retail trader, groaning and sweating under the screws of the trust, the coming of the new company was a joy unspeakable. To the prosecuted consumer, who for some years had been noticing a decline in the quality of his tobacco, there showed at last a promise of relief and fair treatment. To break the monopoly—that was the thing. Mr. Ryan, Mr. Widener, and Mr. Root—whose sympathies against monopoly in all its forms can be readily understood—bent themselves assiduously to this congenial task. And this is how they did it. For six months or less the gentlemen on Captain Duke's quarter-deck looked into the muzzle of the pistol held by the syndicate. Then they offered to surrender. What did the syndicate want? Well, it wanted to be bought. For how much? For $10,000,000 and the control of the trust ship. That was all.

The terms were hard, but there was no other way out of the situation. A battle with the syndicate would have sunk the ship and all on board. There were too many and too big guns involved. So the Duke party agreed to the terms. They issued $35,000,000 of additional American Tobacco stock, paid $10,000,000 for the paper-fed Union Tobacco Company, bought the subsidiary companies that the Union gentlemen had organized; and while Captain Duke still stood at the wheel and issued orders, the new crowd studied the charts below and laid the course, and that new crowd was composed of Mr. Ryan and his friends.

Probably their most remarkable achievement was their performance with Liggett & Myers. The attempted Keene mutiny had revealed the fact that Liggett & Myers would join a combination or sell to one opposed to the American. The Ryan-Root-Widener syndicate, acting on this hint, made up a pool of $200,000 and with it secured an option for sixty days to purchase the Liggett & Myers business at $18,000,000, thereby netting a profit of $6,800,000 on an expenditure of $200,000.

The profits of the syndicate in its Union Tobacco deal were stupendous. It put into the venture $1,350,000. Besides securing control of one of the greatest profit makers in the world, the syndicate cleared:

On the Blackwell deal.....	$4,500,000
On the Liggett & Myers deal.....	6,800,000
On the sale of Union Tobacco Company.....	8,650,000
Total.....	19,950,000

This in less than six months, without making anything, selling anything, or developing anything; and also without effort, risk, or expenditure, except for options and the issuing of fictitious stock.

Of the $35,000,000 of additional American stock, $21,000,000 went as another scrip dividend to the holders of American Tobacco, who were thus again presented with riches that represented nothing but the enforced contributions of the public.

No sooner was this pleasant affair concluded than the new directors of the ship began some dizzy evolutions on a broader sea.

You may recall that the subsidiary company organized to control the plug trade and fight Liggett & Myers had been called the "Continental Tobacco Concern." It was floated in New Jersey, December 9, 1898, with $75,000,000 capital stock, half common and half preferred, of which there was issued $31,145,000 of preferred and $31,146,500 of common. Its business was unsatisfactory because of the cost of fighting the firms still outside the trust and because it was monstrously overcapitalized to start with, so that its net earnings for 1899 were only $2,032,756, and it paid only 3 per cent on the preferred and nothing on the common.

It was with this branch of the business that the new control elected to work. The war with Spain had brought about greatly increased revenue duties on tobacco. After the war closed the tobacco interests desired to have these duties reduced to a peace basis, but, on the plea that the Government needed the money, Congress had refused to make any reduction.

Knowledge of these impending changes was kept a profound secret, except from the men that controlled the trust.

Immediately these men went into the market and bought all the Continental stock they could find. When they began to buy it was quoted at 12 and was inert. Unluckily the time was short and they had no chance to work the device by which a man buys while he pretends to sell and thus keeps the price from rising. The gentlemen were compelled for once to buy outright, and after a time the stock began to feel the effects. The price rose to 17, 18, 20, 22, but not before, at bottom prices, the gentlemen had secured vast loads of it.

They then prepared a new issue of Continental Tobacco Company bonds bearing 5 per cent interest. These bonds, they arranged, should be exchangeable for Continental stock.

When all this was ready, out came the news from Washington that the revenue duties were to be reduced, and up bounded the prices of all tobacco stocks.

But the gentlemen that managed the trust had secured theirs beforehand, and they now proceeded to exchange the stock they had secured at 12 and thereabouts for bonds at 70, an operation in which they cleared about $15,000,000.

Meantime the capital stock of the American Tobacco Company, which had been $25,000,000 in 1890, was nominally $68,500,000 in 1900, and with the subsidiary and other companies amounted to $200,000,000 and more.

With every desire to be temperate and fair, I am obliged to say that, so far as I can discover, the creating of this colossal something from nothing had involved no risk, no effort, little or no investment, no development of any industry, no economic equivalent, and no higher type of mentality than controls the simplest operation of the smallest country store.

Nor have we, by any means, seen the last of this easy fortune making. In June, 1901, the gentlemen in control, under the pretense of extending to foreign and less-favored lands the blessings of the trust principle, formed a new concern, the Consolidated Tobacco Company, and, of course, out came a new flood of water. The capital stock of the Consolidated Tobacco Company was $40,000,000, and it issued $157,378,200 of 4 per cent bonds, making its total capitalization nearly $200,000,000. With these fresh tokens of something from nothing it took over the American and the Continental, giving $100 in 4 per cent bonds for every $50 of American and $100 in 4 per cent bonds for every $100 of Continental. The public tolerance being not yet exhausted, the same old game was worked again on these issues, and again the insiders, having knowledge of what was toward, picked up Continental stock in advance and added further millions to their vast hoards.

How the trust now sailed for British waters, how Captain Duke made a sad mess of his voyage, how the ship was rescued from an attacking party of Englishmen that threatened to sink her, and how she now sails unmolested and taking toll on those busy seas are things not unfamiliar and not part of my story. What I desire to point out is that the Consolidated Tobacco Company is by no means the last illustration of high finance that these records afford. If I may be believed by the uninitiated, the device that had been worked so often to the injury of the public and the ruin of the retailer was employed again. On September 9, 1904, there appeared a new American Tobacco Company, which, with another flood of water, took over the Consolidated, the Continental, the old American, and all the rest of the outfit, and again multiplied the capitalization on which the country must furnish the profits.

For instance, the new company retired the $157,378,000 of the Consolidated Company's 4 per cent bonds by giving one-half 6 per cent preferred stock in the new company and one-half 4 per cent bonds. Six per cent bonds were given for old American Tobacco preferred at 116½. Besides all these securities the new company had $100,000,000 of common stock of its own, and in the year of grace 1906 on this stock, thus made of nothing, it paid 22½ per cent in dividends.

At the present time, the total capitalization of the whole enterprise, including the dummy, subsidiary, fraudulent, decoy, alias stool-pigeon, and other companies is about $500,000,000, all created from $25,000,000 of speculative and paper assets put together by Captain Duke and his friends in 1890.

As an indication of how the thing has grown, I quote figures from the American Tobacco Company alone, showing nine years' expansion:

So stands this colossal and astounding structure erected upon the good-natured tolerance of the American people. The like successful exploitation has never been known in any land at any time. One of the men that have drawn golden fortunes from it, a man that in 1890 was penniless and harassed with debts, now counts more than $40,000,000 made without labor, without effort, without investment, without risk, without the vestige of any return to society.

On the increasing mass of stocks and bonds, the issuing of which has occasioned this man's fortune, there have been paid, and are now being paid, colossal sums in dividends and interest charges.

Where do these dividends and interest charges come from and who pays them?

And now we reach the heart of the whole matter.

I offer here for consideration two isolated facts:

1. At 1 o'clock on the morning of December 1, 1906, 300 armed men rode into Princeton, Ky., seized the night watch, locked up the town's fire apparatus, and proceeded to burn two tobacco warehouses owned by the tobacco trust. While the fires were under way the armed men were drawn up in lines of defense about them and prevented any attempt to extinguish the flames. As soon as the warehouses were destroyed the men released the watch and the fire apparatus and rode away. Three hundred thousand pounds of tobacco had been burned.

The men engaged in this outbreak of violence were not bandits nor ruffians; they were peaceful farmers. They did not desire wantonly to destroy property; they had been goaded by extortions and fraud, against which they had no protection, to revenge themselves in the only way in their power upon the men that had oppressed them.

2. In April, 1907, Hermann Beck, a well-known retail tobaccoist of Portland, Oreg., having lost his once flourishing business, committed suicide. He had lost his business because he had been driven out of it by the tobacco trust.

The first of these incidents illustrates what the trust has done for the producer; the second, what it has done for the retailer. The two being multiplied and extended, indicate where the money has come from that paid the dividends and interest on the watered American Tobacco securities.

The United Cigar Stores Company, a branch of the trust, has more than 500 retail stores in the country (183 of them in New York City), and, speaking roughly, each of these represents a former retailer that has been deprived of his business. The method by which he has been deprived of it is one of the few operations of the trust that have been visible to the eyes of the layman. It is a process that most observant persons must have seen or known of—the little independent dealer overpowered and crushed by the big trust store next door—but few are aware, I suppose, of the tragedies that are sometimes involved in the crushing.

Some of the crushed dealers have been old men, whose one source of livelihood lay in their little shops. Some have been civil war veterans, some have been for many years in the one place and the one trade, some have been cripples and invalids. All have gone the one way when the trust started to capture their business. Sometimes the trust has resorted to extreme measures to pull them down. It has induced their landlords to raise their rent to unendurable figures; it has bought the property they rented; very often it has pushed them to ruin by giving tobacco away or selling at prices that made competition impossible. A certain Broadway dealer that had for years bravely resisted the trust has been fought from two cigar stores adjoining him. For one of these the rental is $20,000 a year, which is more than the year's total sales in that store. On the morning that this particular place opened, the man it was designed to crush walked into it and saw behind the counter four salesmen that had formerly been independent cigar dealers and had been driven out of business by the trust. It was now using them to drive out others. Such as are young and active among the ruined tradesmen can usually find for a time employment with the trust, employment at small salaries and under humiliating conditions. The older men shift for themselves or go to the poorhouse.

I do not know how many suicides like that of Hermann Beck resulted from these operations. The remaining retailers say there have been very many. Certainly Beck's is not the only case. The whole history of the development has been a story of cruel hardship. I will give one example from many:

Joseph Liebman kept for many years a cigar store at No. 264 West One hundred and twenty-fifth street, New York City. Agents of the trust came to him about four years ago and told him that he had better retire from that neighborhood, as the trust was about to open a store there. Liebman declined to move. The agent said that he would be crushed as other small dealers had been crushed before him. He replied that he had a good trade and plenty of strong friends and was not afraid of competition. The trust opened a store next door. Liebman did not budge. The trust store began to give away cigars and tobacco. Liebman held on. Then the trust leased the ground on which Liebman's store stood and bought the building. As soon as his term expired the trust put him into the street with his stock and fixtures, which he was obliged to put into storage until he could find quarters at No. 201 West One hundred and twenty-fifth street. Now he has to operate a barber's shop to make a living.

This is a typical case; wherever the trust has appeared it has achieved similar triumphs; its pathway to success and profits has been over ruined tradesmen. On a certain stretch of Broadway where ten years ago were thirty-six independent cigar stores are now but six; and the former proprietors of the other thirty are either salesmen for the trust, servitors, dependent for their bread upon whim, fancy, and caprice, subject to espionage and suspicion, or they have sought other work, or they have died. And so the trust has wrought everywhere.

As for the producer, that is a still more melancholy story. From time immemorial tobacco leaf had been sold in the tobacco-raising regions at the free competition of buyers. There was never any quoted price for tobacco as there is for wheat or cotton, but the farmers brought their tobacco to market and the buyers were wont to bid for it. The trust has changed all this, for now in a great part of the tobacco region there is but one buyer. The trust makes the price what it pleases, and the farmer must accept this price or take his tobacco home again.

Under the operation of this system such tobacco as for years had brought in a free and open market 6 to 20 cents a pound sells for 3 to 10 cents a pound or less. The land that had formerly produced $75 to $200 an acre now yields less than half of its former returns, and a distinguished Kentuckian has calculated that in his State, because of the operation of the trust, the returns to the tobacco farmer are less than 20 cents a day for his labor.

In four of the countries of Europe—France, Italy, Austria, and Spain—tobacco is a Government business, and these four governments buy in the United States every year about 1,000,000 pounds of tobacco. The trust arranged with the buyers for these Governments that they should have a certain fixed territory in the South in which they might buy without opposition, provided they should buy nothing outside of that territory.

When this arrangement was made, it destroyed the last chance of competition and gave over the producer, bound, to his despoiler.

Against these conditions the farmers of the South have protested to Congress, to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and to the courts, for every step in the trust's proceedings has been wholly illegal and specifically prohibited. Yet the law has never been enforced upon this trust, nor has the Government until lately given it any greater heed than is involved in some feeble, perfunctory, and quickly abandoned inquiries.

Meantime, there is the consumer, of whom nobody seems to think much. What does it mean for him that competition has been eliminated; that the profits of the American Tobacco Company have been swollen to these colossal figures; that the owners of the trust are becoming the richest men in the world?

This is what it means for him:

The trust has secured the ownership of almost every well-known brand of Habana, Key West, and domestic cigars, brands that have been familiar for years upon years to all smokers, and that for years upon years have maintained an even degree of excellence. Many good judges of tobacco claim that under the names of these brands the trust puts forth steadily a worse quality of goods, until at last the brand dies. Their theory is that before its death the trust has sold great quantities of the brand, these goods have been produced at perhaps one-third of the original cost, and the profits have been enormous.

So far has this work been carried that some of the brands of cigarettes and smoking tobaccos formerly best known have disappeared entirely from the market. Why should the trust not do as it pleases in these matters? Every day the consumer finds greater difficulty in discovering a cigar store outside of the trust; every day a greater proportion of the retail business is seized by the trust. Many stores that pretend to be independent and do not fly the trust flag are really owned by the trust; you can hardly tell when you are buying of the trust and when you are not. Great, glittering, brilliantly lighted stores, cleverly worded advertisements, specious promises of low prices, attract and delude the consumer; it does not seem possible that bad goods can come from such imposing places. With much cunning the trust has brought into the business the influence of women. Imitating the trading-stamp device, it holds forth bribes in the shape of coupons that are exchangeable for articles of household use, and thus it induces women to urge their husbands to buy at trust stores. As the trust, by the use of inferior tobacco, by making large purchases, and by robbing the producer, has an abnormal margin of profit, it can of course well afford these bribes.

So that herein at last is displayed in the clearest colors the exact meaning and results of the formula for wealth making when that formula has done its perfect work. The bonds are issued, the stock is floated, the syndicate is enriched, the palace arises; and every cent thus represented we furnish—we that consume the tobacco, ship the freight, grow the crops, eat the beef, hang to the straps of the Subway; we upon whose backs is piled the whole vast mass of watered stocks, fictitious bonds, fraudulent scrip, gambling securities! And the only profit obtained by society in all these operations is the spectacle of five or six men accumulating vast fortunes, fortunes beyond computation, fortunes for a few comprising the sum of available wealth that should be for all.

Such are the facts. Sorry and stained and wretched in the light of them looks this particular palace among the golden houses of the fortunate. Built out of the enforced contributions of the public, the steady violation of the law, the sweat of the defrauded farmer, the blood of the small dealer, what interest has mankind in the mounting millions that it represents, or wherein have we gained from its existence, we whose unexampled patience renders all these things possible?

Mr. Chairman, you ask what about the Night Riders in Kentucky? I do not know any more about the Night Riders than the information I get from the public press. Therefore you have as much knowledge on this subject as I have. But I am perfectly familiar with the character and reputation of the tobacco growers of my State, and I assure you that no better people inhabit any section of this great round globe. They are the best type of American citizenship, who hold the esteem of their fellow-countrymen, law-abiding men, made of that stuff which is the country's bulwark both in time of peace and national peril. I know the consensus of opinion is that the tobacco growers are the Night Riders that are burning barns and destroying property. I am loath to believe it. But, gentlemen, if it be a fact that these hitherto law-abiding citizens, the defenders of the law, have suddenly become a mob and spurn that which they once defended, seeking by the torch what they formerly sought in the courts, it is a potential arraignment of our laws that men be driven to this desperation. I assume that such men are not apt to rub out the good score of a lifetime and become lawless unless the provocation is great; yet we all admit no provocation, not even the provocation of hungry families, ragged children, or blighted lives, justify lawlessness—we must all say of this Government, of the State, and of our country, "We will love it, though it slay us." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, for years the tobacco trust has ruthlessly robbed the growers of this country. This avaricious, greedy monopoly has wrung from them colossal fortunes beside which the famed wealth of Lydia's ancient kings would be a beggar's patrimony.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the firm belief that if Congress had given the tobacco grower relief by repealing the iniquitous revenue tax and oppressive Government restrictions preventing him from properly and conveniently preparing the product of his toil for market, the bitter and dramatic warfare that is now being waged in Kentucky between the trust and the growers would have never been thought of. The tobacco grower is fighting for bread, a battle of defense. The trust is fighting for gold, one of offense. The purpose of one is to preserve that which he hath; the purpose of the other is to reap where he has not sown. One is trying to lift the yoke of a master; the other is trying to rivet its shackles upon the galled ankles of its slave.

I do not believe that violence is the proper method to employ in the quarrel between the tobacco trusts and tobacco grower. I do not believe that arson is the cure for any evil. He has for years appealed to the Government he is taxed to maintain to unhand him that he might shield his home from hunger, rags, and wretchedness, and that Government heeded not. He saw his wife, daughters, and little children driven to the field to work like beasts of burden by the insatiate lust of this remorseless, pitiless, greedy monopoly, that it might add more millions to its already overflowing coffers. They felt the tyranny of the oppression and struck out blindly, violently, and lawlessly, but the provocation was grievous and the exasperation great.

Under the internal-revenue laws of the United States, which we are attempting to modify, if a grower takes the stem out of the tobacco grown by him, so that it may be twisted and put into a convenient form and sold direct to the consumer, all the laws applicable to the manufacturers of tobacco become applicable to him, and he is required to pay a Government tax of 6 cents per pound thereon.

Under the laws the grower is denied the right to make advantageous disposition of his crop, and is thereby placed at the mercy of the trust. The situation is simply this: The trust owns and controls 90 per cent of all the tobacco factories of the world, consuming 90 per cent of all the tobacco produced in the United States, and it therefore, with the assistance of the laws of the Government, forces every producer to sell to it, as I have shown, thus destroying every vestige of competition of the purchase of tobacco in its raw state as well as the sale of the manufactured article. The consequence is that the trust under present conditions has the power to arbitrarily fix the price of every pound of tobacco that it purchases or sells, without regard to its real value.

The growers of tobacco do not ask the aid of the law to destroy the trust, nor do they ask the aid of the law to force the trust to deal with them fairly and on business principles; but they do ask that the law be so modified that they may be allowed to prepare their tobacco in its pure, raw, or unadulterated state in any form they deem most convenient to reach the consumer; and after being so prepared, all persons shall have the right to buy and sell the same without Government tax, restrictions, or regulations. Under these conditions they can compete with the trust and sustain themselves without the aid of the Government.

Why should a grower of tobacco be required to pay a heavy tax for the privilege of preparing the product of his land so that it may be sold to the consumer? The argument in favor of such a law is no more plausible than to say a farmer should not shuck his corn, thrash his wheat, gin his cotton, or make bacon out of his hogs without paying such a tax.

I am aware the trust will oppose the passage of a measure of this character and will use the argument which at first blush seems plausible and contend that the passage of the law would deprive the Government of a large amount of revenue. In answer to this argument we insist that the amount of revenue which the Government would be deprived of by the passage of this bill would be inconsiderable, for the reason that if a grower were allowed a market for his tobacco other than the trust affords, the trust would be forced to meet competition and pay a fair price. And no grower of tobacco when he could sell at a fair price in the "hand" could ever afford to take the time and trouble to twist and stem it so as to sell it to the consumer. Under ordinary circumstances they would always prefer to sell direct to the manufacturer; but if the trust should undertake to unjustly oppress the grower, as it is now doing, by fixing the price of tobacco in the hands of the growers in its unstemmed condition at less than it is worth or out of proportion to what it charges for the manufactured article, the grower could, as a matter of self-defense, seek another market by selling to the consumer independent of the trust.

For the sake of argument, suppose the claim of the trust is true that by the passage of the measure the Government will lose a considerable amount of money in the way of taxes. We contend that no government is justified in impoverishing a certain class of her people for the sake of collecting taxes on any commodity of agriculture or should so frame its laws that in order to collect such taxes a gigantic trust would be fostered and given a monopoly of the purchase of the raw material and sale of the manufactured articles of such an important product as tobacco.

I want you to listen to the admonition of that martyred statesman and patriot, Abraham Lincoln, the greatest of all Republicans, when he warns you "not to put the dollar above the man."

When you take the position that you can not give relief to these suffering people because it will reduce the revenue, you do "put the dollar above the man." You weigh human misery in the balance and deliberately put a price upon human happiness.

We contend that but for the laws as they now exist the tobacco trust could not maintain this monopoly of the tobacco business in all of its branches in the United States, as it is doing to-day, by means of which it is unjustly oppressing hundreds of thousands of the best and most loyal citizens of the Government and depriving them of the means of providing the necessities and comforts of life for themselves and families.

These people ask no exclusive privilege. They contend that the trust has taken advantage of the revenue laws and by means thereof have destroyed all competition among the purchasers of tobacco, and by reason of these conditions the trust arbitrarily fixes any price it sees proper at which the grower shall sell his tobacco, whether it be one-half or one-fourth of its value, and thereby unjustly converts to its own use innumerable millions of dollars in the way of profits, more than the Government can ever hope to realize in the way of taxes.

It is claimed that tobacco is a luxury and therefore ought to be taxed. Upon this question there is a difference of opinion. If it is a luxury, it is about the only one the poor man can enjoy. In my opinion it is one of the necessities of life to the world at large. You may go where you will, you may circle this great, round globe, and wherever you find the poor laboring man at work you will find him with his pipe and tobacco. It is his solace; it is as necessary almost to his comfort and happiness as the food that goes into his mouth.

Mr. Chairman, for the sake of argument, let us admit that tobacco is a luxury. No one who ever toiled in or knows anything about its cultivation will for a moment say that it is a luxury to produce. It requires more ceaseless toil to produce it than any other crop that grows out of the earth. It requires from twelve to sixteen months to grow and market a crop of tobacco. The plant beds are sown in February and March. The crop is transplanted in May and June. It is cut and put in the barn in August and September, and after going through a drying and curing process for from four to six months is stripped and prepared for market. Therefore if tobacco be a luxury, it is in its consumption and not in its production.

Mr. Chairman, the tobacco planters and the people who are depending upon them for a living are appealing to you for relief.

They appeal to you to relieve them of this onerous, iniquitous, and unjust tax. They do not want your sympathy; they spurn your charity; they ask only even-handed justice; that they may have an opportunity to earn their bread by the sweat of their face; that the fruits of their own labor may go into their pockets and not into the coffers of a heartless, greedy trust.

Gentlemen, you are the guardians of the people and ought not ignore the rights of the toilers that Dives may add to his fortune.

Mr. Chairman, three times a bill has passed the House of Representatives to take the tax off tobacco. It passed the Fifty-eighth Congress unanimously; it passed the Fifty-ninth Congress in the same manner, and, sir, it passed this, the Sixtieth Congress, without one voice of the 391 Members of this House being raised in opposition to it. Hope beat high in the hearts of the struggling farmers of the tobacco world; they said three times, "Through that highest body of legislative power which is elected directly by the people, our bill has passed without opposition," but Mr. Chairman, where was the bill buried? Twice it has found its last resting place in the Senate. Now a bill is before this same body, passed unanimously by the House. What shall be its fate? In the name of God and humanity, I pray it may be passed. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the Government of Norway the moiety of the United States of an award under the convention between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany for the settlement of Samoan claims, which was signed at Washington on November 7, 1899, $200.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the Government of Sweden the moiety of the United States of an award under the convention between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany for the settlement of Samoan claims, which was signed at Washington on November 7, 1899, $375.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting a new paragraph after line 9, page 2, as follows: "That the President be, and he is hereby, empowered and requested to direct the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Secretary of Agriculture to place at the disposition of the International Tuberculosis Congress, under such terms and conditions as the President may authorize or prescribe, such space, not now occupied, in the new National Museum, Municipal, and Agricultural buildings, respectively, as may be needed to properly provide for the meeting of such International Tuberculosis Congress, including exhibits, to be held in September and October of the present year, and the use of said buildings for such purposes is hereby authorized; and permanent occupancy of such buildings, respectively, shall be postponed in so far as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, Members of the House will understand that a request has been made by the persons having in charge the interests of the International Tuberculosis Congress for some space in the city of Washington where their congress and exhibition may be held. The first request which came to the Members of the House and to the Congress came with a request for the use of the House Office Building. Subsequently I introduced a resolution proposing to give to the congress in place of the House Office Building a portion of the Capitol building, including the Hall of the House, and the Senate Chamber, and the adjoining and connecting corridors. After that the officials of the congress insisted that they would need space that would cover both Capitol building and House Office Building.

We all understand that it is quite a dangerous precedent to establish to give the use of the House Office Building, and also a dangerous precedent to give the use of the Capitol building for any outside organization. Since the request of the International Tuberculosis Congress for the use of these buildings has been made, other requests by other bodies have been presented. The matter was referred to a special committee on the distribution of rooms.

We have given hearings to the officials of the tuberculosis congress and others connected with the matter several times, and the members of that committee have unanimously agreed it would be desirable to add the amendment now offered to the general deficiency bill, which proposes to give to the President the right to direct the various officials having buildings in charge to turn over the use of the new National Museum building, the Municipal building, and the unoccupied portions of the Agricultural building. It is possible that after this becomes a law, if it does become a law, it will be necessary to make some appropriations to put the National Museum building, so far as its floors and stairways are concerned, in proper shape; but I think that the general sentiment of the Congress would be that if necessary it would be far better to spend a few thousand dollars in putting in false flooring and stairways in the new National Museum building than it would be to turn over the use of the Capitol building or the House Office Building. But the present amendment does not cover that. All that is sought now is to confer the authority for the use of these buildings for the International Tuberculosis Congress.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this is a most important matter in which a great many people all over the country take a deep interest, and I hope the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be adopted. I take an abiding interest in this tuberculosis congress. It will probably be one of the most important conventions, so far as material benefits are concerned, which has ever assembled in this or any other country. It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to provide in some way, somehow, suitable accommodations for the assembling of these distinguished experts who are doing so much for science, and giving so much of their valuable time to this appalling subject, the great white plague, which is decimating humanity every year to a much greater extent than all the wars in all the world. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It is in a good cause and should be adopted unanimously. Anything that will check the progress of this frightful plague will be a boon to humanity most devoutly to be wished.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] brought this matter up before, there was a large House present, and it was generally discussed. In the course of that discussion I made a few suggestions. As is well known, Nashville, my home city, is a city of great learning.

Mr. MANN. That is evidenced by its Representative.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. We have there the Vanderbilt University, the Normal School, the Fisk University, medical colleges, church colleges, and the bishops of all the churches of the South meet there, and so forth. We discussed the question of letting the tuberculosis congress use the empty Capitol, and I was willing to agree to that and am now. I put it upon the ground that this is an "international" matter, and that it would not meet in the United States possibly within the next twenty or twenty-five years, and certainly after twenty-five years go by we can then again throw open the portals of this great Chamber, where the greatest law-making power in the world assembles. So much for that. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois how much space these buildings will give these people?

Mr. MANN. The officials of the tuberculosis congress can not say exactly how much space they will require, but they estimate they may require 100,000 square feet of space. The buildings which we have covered in the amendment will provide them all of that and more if necessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have received a number of suggestions from these physicians down at home that they want offices, they want consultation rooms. I do not know why. Possibly they will have patients or exhibits or something to show each other how they are treating tuberculosis. Are we going to have that?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit the interruption, I could not hear whether the gentleman from Illinois stated it or not, but I desire to state that the officials of that congress at the last hearing before our committee concluded their statement with the statement that this Capitol building would not answer their purpose at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then that is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Office of Treasurer of the United States (national currency to be reimbursed by national banks): For reimbursement of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the services of employees detailed to the office of the Treasurer of the United States to assort notes in the national bank redemption agency from April 6 to June 30, 1908, $3,619.59.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation of the extra force sent over to assist the Treasury Department in assorting national-bank notes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the counters and printers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are experts, and since the beginning of this year, since the 1st of March at least, there has been a great demand on account of the increased number of bank notes presented for redemption, all of which must be counted and sorted before the work of redemption is complete. They transfer these experts from the Bureau of Printing and Engraving over to the Treasury Department for that purpose, and when the work is completed in the Treasury Department, they are returned again.

Mr. GILLESPIE. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that these national-bank notes have accumulated in the Treasury from seven millions last December to fifty-seven millions now, and in about the same amount the gold of the general fund has decreased. We had at that time something like one hundred millions in the general fund of gold and gold certificates. I hold in my hands a tabulated daily statement of the gold and gold certificates and national-bank notes in the general fund of the Treasury from December 2 last to the 13th of this month. This statement shows that we had in the general fund on December 2 last, ninety-six millions gold and certificates and seven millions national-bank notes; December 13, one hundred and four millions gold and nine millions of bank notes; January 2, ninety-nine millions gold and eleven millions notes; January 11, ninety-three millions gold and sixteen millions notes; February 1, sixty-seven millions gold and thirty millions notes; March 16, sixty-two millions gold and thirty-five millions notes; April 1, fifty-eight millions gold and forty millions notes; April 20, forty-one millions gold and forty-four millions notes; May 8, thirty-nine millions gold and fifty-four millions notes; May 13, forty-five millions gold and fifty-seven millions notes.

As the bank notes have gone up in the general fund the gold has gone down, and I see this extra force has been working since the 6th of April, and the bank notes have been accumulating. The fact of the matter is the Secretary of the Treasury has made a call upon the banks to pay back certain of their deposits. The debt of the banks to the Government has just been changed from a deposit liability to a note liability. The banks owe the Government about as much now as they did before these calls were made, and I just wondered what this extra force could do in this situation where the bank notes are constantly accumulating and the gold in the general fund is constantly disappearing, with the apparent disposition of the Treasury not to collect from the banks.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, that I may be enabled for two or three minutes to speak upon a subject that is not appropriate, nor has it anything whatever to do with any of the provisions of this bill. I do not wish to be declared disorderly, and therefore without asking formal permission, I hope that no one will take me to task. Last Saturday there appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter, which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] very generously and very kindly printed that he might do justice to a man whose name had heretofore appeared in public print in a light unfavorable to him. Therefore I appeal to the House to permit me for the space of two or three minutes to testify to the integrity of a splendid soldier and a good man. Colonel Waller is not a thief. He never took from anyone dishonestly that he might enrich himself. Perhaps his good name, for which I propose to stand, makes my testimony unnecessary, but inasmuch as the gentleman from Texas, not knowing him at all well, did no more than print the letter and disclaim any intention of attack, I find myself performing a pleasant duty when I speak of Colonel Waller as a friend. My knowledge of him and his performances, covering a period of many years, justifies me in speaking of him as one who knows him well. He did not loot China, neither did he permit anyone else to rob the Chinese during their unfortunate rout from Tientsin and Peking in the summer of 1900.

The evidence is ample and convincing that he stood against those entertaining a design upon the rich stores of the Chinese while they were in flight. The authorities of China credit him with fidelity to his obligations as a soldier and a caretaker of their property. Since his return I have seen him often and have visited him and his family; talked with him of his campaign and his official life during his service in China, and have had the chance of observation which enables me to deny the statement that he brought property with him which belonged to the Chinese. While men are slow to confess their sins, even to friends upon whom they can rely with safety, I know, as others know whose acquaintanceship affords them the opportunity of knowing the affairs of friends, that this soldier whose deeds have been so often applauded, and deservedly so, never broke nor stimulated others to break the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal."

It seems to me that I have been but just to this man to have borne my testimony, that it might appear on record with the letter which the gentleman from Texas had read here and printed last Saturday. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Treasury Department: For freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service, $3,500.

Transportation of fractional silver coin: For transportation of fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $10,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, fractional silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I desire to call the attention of the committee to another deficiency in the appropriation for the transportation of silver coins. They have had a deficiency as far back as I recollect in my service here in the House. They have here a $10,000 deficiency and possibly in the next paragraph a deficiency there of $130.65. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if the Senate retained the amendment that we put in some one of the bills here a few days ago covering silver coin and, I think, minor coin, one or the other or both, to be carried by registered mail and otherwise. I have not seen the bill as it came from the Senate. I have not had the opportunity.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think the Senate changed the provision of the House bill in regard to the method of transportation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You remember the amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I remember the amendment distinctly, but I have no recollection now of seeing it changed, although I would not state positively.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope, if it is stricken out over there, the gentleman will insist on its retention.

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill has been in conference; I do not think there has been any change in that matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope it will not be changed, so that in future we can have silver coins sent by registered mail, and the Secretary of the Treasury can do it. I have been to the Treasury Office and inquired, and they have little bags, etc., in which they can send it, and if they send part of it by registered mail and part by express, then there will be competition in the rate, just as we have competition when we make a Government ship in a Government yard and one in a private yard.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Transportation of silver coin" for the fiscal year 1907, $130.65.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few observations upon the general subject of the tariff, suggested by the very general discussion, both in and out of Congress, on the subject of putting wood pulp and white print paper on the free list. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted the same privilege upon postal savings banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of wire fence and wood pulp.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I introduced H. R. 16755, having for its object the taking off of duties on all plain and galvanized iron or steel wire, woven or welded into fencing or manufactured into barbed wire.

In offering this amendment to the present tariff laws the importance and value of a protective tariff to American industries, capital and labor were not overlooked. After carefully considering the value and importance of our tariff system, as well as the importance of the measure and the present conditions, I believe that, as a protectionist and a Republican, I am fully justified in presenting this bill. I yield to nobody in admiration, loyalty, and appreciation of the principles of Republicanism and protection, and I trust that that party may forever cling to that sound and logical doctrine which I believe is so conducive to the welfare, advancement, and happiness of the American people, and which has contributed so much to our nation's growth and greatness.

I believe in, and have always advocated, a tariff to protect our wage-earners, capital, and industries—a tariff that will result in the common good of all our people. But the fact that I stand committed to a great principle governing the construction of all tariff schedules does not imply that I am wedded, hidebound, or committed to any set of tariff schedules nor that I believe or contend that there is anything so sacred in any set of tariff schedules that they can not be changed, or that all of the schedules in the Dingley bill were or are perfect. That act was undoubtedly a wise, scientific, and judicious measure, and one that has brought about marvelous results, and was undoubtedly the very best that could be enacted into law at that time, considering the large number of interests involved; but conditions have changed, which, it seems to me, makes it advisable to change some of the schedules or, possibly, frame a new law which will better meet present conditions. As to this, of course there are many opinions.

I know that our Democratic friends take consolation in the fact that there are differences of opinion in our own ranks as to tariff revision; but this is nothing new, as there always was and always will be differences of opinion in the details of a question of such vast importance. But, Mr. Chairman, there never was, nor is there now, so far as I know, any difference of opinion in the Republican party as to the principle involved, namely, as to a protective tariff system. All Republicans stand united and believe in that great, grand, and cardinal principle, a principle which the Republican party has fought and battled for from its inception to this day.

We stand united for a protective tariff and denounce free trade as advocated by our Democratic friends. We believe in the upbuilding, encouragement, and advancement of American industries and a tariff that will benefit labor and result in the common good of all our people. But, as before stated, that does not imply that there is anything sacred in any set of schedules and that they should not be changed or that the present law is perfect in all its details. There is a question, however, as to when a change should be made. Answering for myself, will say, as I have said for years, that I believe it can safely be undertaken at any time, not that I believe that a perfect bill can be drawn or agreed upon, for I fully appreciate that the many varied interests will have to be harmonized, and the best we may look for is a compromise bill. The policy would of course be in this legislation, as in all previous legislation, to give and take and to make the best bill possible. But even then I believe that the present law can be improved.

This, of course, would require much time, and more time than we now have to give, in view of the many other important questions to be considered, and I have no exception to take to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and others that tariff revision should go over until after the Presidential election, and that it can then be taken up at an extra session and given the most careful consideration. I trust and believe that it will then be done, and that it will be done by a Republican Congress, in order that the principles of protection may be adhered to in every instance. So in the few minutes I have I shall not undertake to discuss tariff schedules in general. I will content myself by offering a few observations on one or two schedules, and will first give a few reasons why I believe all plain and galvanized iron or steel wire, woven or welded into fencing or manufactured into barbed wire, should be admitted free of duty into the United States on and after July 1, 1908.

For years the Agriculture Department has carried on a careful and extensive investigation with a view of ascertaining the quality of wire fencing manufactured and sold. Anyone who will take the trouble to look up the reports and investigate will, I believe, reach the conclusion that the wire manufactured and sold at the present time in the United States is much inferior to that manufactured and sold years ago. He will find that wire made under the present process, the Bessemer and open-hearth process, is much inferior to the wire made years ago by the puddling method. Wire manufactured and sold to-day has probably equally as much, if not more, tensile strength, but it cracks and breaks off under vibration, expansion, and contraction, and is less resistant to rust, corrosion, and deterioration. The trouble is it contains too high a percentage of manganese and other impurities. The excess quantity and unequal distribution of manganese and other impurities of course makes the wire less durable, and it lasts only about one-quarter or one-fifth as long as the wire made twenty years ago. The old wire, or the more durable wire, was made of wrought iron by the old process, the puddling method, where the impurities were oxidized or burnt off and the impurities more evenly distributed. The puddling method required more labor, and it is claimed that with the present high-priced labor it can not be expected that hand-worked metal can compete in price with that produced by modern methods. As a result the steel wire, generally made from fairly high carbon hard steel, has been substituted for the old and more durable wire made out of wrought iron by the old process—the pulling method—especially the woven wire. Therefore a much inferior quality of wire is being sold the farmers and consumers of wire, not because of the inability of the manufacturers to furnish the quality desired, but from avarice and greed for profits.

The same is true as to steel sheets used for roofing, smoke flues, locomotive flues, gas pipes, and so forth. Take, for example, roofs and sides which were covered with corrugated iron sheets of heavy gauge twenty years ago, where extensions have later been erected at periods of from five to fifteen years, and where steel sheets of the same gauge were used and subjected to the same conditions and treated the same. The roof sheets laid on the first part have been found in good order after twenty years, while the steel sheets laid later have lasted only four or five years. Those who have had experience with both kinds say that the present sheets last only one-fourth or one-fifth as long as the old ones.

Besides the investigation and information furnished by the Department, I have received a large number of letters on the subject. I will not take up the time of the House to read all of them, but will read one. Here is a letter written by a gentleman I have known for thirty years. He is a practical, intelligent, and successful farmer, and what he says can be relied upon:

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN.

MANLY, IOWA, February 21, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Allow me to thank you for the splendid work you are doing, and especially for your bill putting fence wire on the free list.

I have some fence on my place that has been doing service for twenty years, and the wire is now in better condition than some that I erected five years ago. It is utterly impossible to obtain good wire now at any price. I know I am voicing the sentiment of the entire farming community when I urge the passage of your bill.

Sincerely, yours,

M. PARKER.

Besides this I have had some experiences myself. I have bought and used fence wire for thirty years, and know that the fence wire manufactured and sold in recent years is much inferior to and shorter lived than that sold years ago.

I will also ask to have printed in the Record some of the correspondence with manufacturers of wire, and newspaper clippings, which give much light on the subject. I will also invite your attention to Farmers' Bulletin No. 239, by Allerton S. Cushman, who has carried on an extensive investigation for the Department of Agriculture:

THE DENNING WIRE AND FENCE COMPANY,
Cedar Rapids, Iowa, March 12, 1908.

Mr. G. N. HAUGEN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 26th ultimo, and also copy of your bill introduced in the House to have the duty removed from plain and galvanized wire and wire fencing. This matter has brought out some correspondence in the American Artisan, a hardware journal published in Chicago. I have cut from the same this correspondence and am inclosing it herewith. In this correspondence I wish to call your particular attention to the article from the Indiana Steel and Wire Company, of Muncie, Ind., as I consider this article explains fully the position of the independent wire and wire fence manufacturers as regards their relation to the American Steel and Wire Company, which is a part of the steel trust.

There are about forty independent manufacturers of wire fence, about ten or fifteen of which make their own wire. The majority of the wire-fence manufacturers not making their own wire are dependent upon the trust for their wire to make their fence. The trust is in a position to charge them almost any price they desire for their wire, and at the price they are charging them they hardly leave the independent manufacturers a living profit. The fence manufacturers who are making their own wire are nearly all dependent upon the trust for their rods from which to draw their wire. There are possibly four or five independent wire mills that make their own rods, but, going back of this for the raw material, they are dependent almost entirely upon the trust for their billets. (There are but a few independent manufacturers outside of the trust making steel, and as they are evidently in the pool with the trust, they have put the price on billets up to an abnormally high price, and are charging $28 a ton for them, which is the pool price on steel rails. It used to be customary with steel manufacturers to sell billets at about $4 per ton less than steel rails on account of the extra expense in rolling rails. The billet is the initial article in the steel product above the pig iron. They are usually made in chunks 4 inches square by 4 feet long.) There are two classes of these—Bessemer billets and open-hearth billets. The Bessemer billet is made from Bessemer pig iron. The open-hearth and tougher than Bessemer, is made from about 50 to 60 per cent Bessemer pig iron and 40 to 50 per cent steel scrap iron. These two ingredients being melted together and poured out into molds are called being melted together and poured into molds are called "blooms," "blooms," which is a chunk of iron about 18 inches square and about 4 feet long. These are taken while hot and passed back and forth between two rollers until they are rolled down 4 inches square and then chopped off into lengths of 4 feet each, and these in turn are reheated and run through rollers again and rolled down to what are called "wire rods," between three-sixteenths inch and one-fourth inch in thickness, and sold to wire mills, and they in turn, after taking the scale off from them, draw them cold down to various sizes of wire.

Now, it is my opinion that the tariff should be removed from billets and rods as well as from wire, as I do not think the removing of the duty from wire alone will change the price much, if any; possibly it may a little along the Atlantic seacoast, but not very far inland; but if the $8 per ton duty were taken off from billets, it would reduce the price just about an equal amount on billets and rods. This would give the independent manufacturers a chance to operate, instead, as the Indiana Steel and Wire Company writes, of destroying the business of the so-called "independent" wire manufacturers. The price of billets and rods is now held at about the import price, or possibly a dollar or two per ton over the import price, as the independent manufacturers of rods and wire will pay $1 or $2 per ton more to purchase their material in this country rather than to order it from Germany or any other foreign country, on account of the number of months it takes to make deliveries on imported material. I think every independent wire and fence manufacturer in the United States would hail with pleasure the removal of the duty on billets and rods, and with the numerous independent manufacturers in this country the competition would be such as to reduce the price on the manufactured article, make a better product, and at the same time allow them to make a reasonable profit, which they are not now getting.

The iron industry in the United States does not need any protection, as the manufacturers in this country export large amounts of steel annually, and import nothing of consequence except special steels and iron not produced in this country. I was advised about a year ago by the president of one of our largest independent wire mills, who are purchasers of wire rods, that he is interested in a contracting firm of New York City who purchased a quantity of steel rails for a railroad in the Philippine Islands from the United States Steel Corporation. The mill price on those, after deducting the transportation charges, figured $18 per ton, while their pool price and the price they are getting for domestic purposes is $28 per ton. About three years ago there was a break in the billet pool and prices went off to $19.25 per ton, f. o. b. Pittsburg. It seems to me that $20 would be a good fair price for billets and about $24 per ton for rails, rather than $28 for both. I am inclosing herewith an article recently cut from the New York Commercial relative to this billet pool. You will notice by this that in order to save a break in the pool the steel corporation began buying up billets in the open market to stimulate prices. They have done the same thing from time to time with pig iron. The price is also abnormally high on this commodity. It is now controlled by agreements, but if there happens a break in the market, they will go to buying it to keep the price up. I was reliably informed two or three years ago that the steel corporation made a large five-year contract with one of our largest independent rod and wire manufacturers in the country to furnish them their billets. The contract is based on the market price of pig iron, and the corporation's price to this concern is based on a sliding scale and goes up and down with the market on pig iron; therefore, in order to keep up the contract price on billets to this independent concern, they evidently do all they can to keep up the price on pig iron. I believe the contract price to the independent concern was made on a basis of $19.25 per ton, but as pig iron has advanced considerably since that contract was made they are no doubt paying $21 to $22 for their billets, but it is stated that the steel corporation shoved up the price of pig iron immediately following this contract for the purpose of shoving up the contract price with this independent wire concern.

In case Senator LA FOLLETTE is not successful in putting through his bill to have a tariff commission, I would recommend that you amend your bill to include the removal of the duty on billets and rods as well as on wire. The removal of the duty on billets would be equally as beneficial to the independent sheet manufacturers, of which there are quite a large number. You would then get the support from those independent manufacturers, but with your present bill, I do not see where you would get any support except possibly from the consumers. I trust that you will give this matter due consideration and do for the independent manufacturers what you are trying to do for the consumers and thereby help both.

Yours, very truly,

J. M. DENNING.

A FENCE-WIRE COMPLAINT.

Advices from Washington, D. C., to the American Artisan state that a bill seeking the removal of the duty of 45 per cent upon barbed or woven wire has been introduced in Congress by Representative HAUGEN, of Iowa. Mr. HAUGEN, it is stated, claims to have the support of the Secretary of Agriculture in an effort to bring the fence-wire trust to terms and insure a better quality of wire for the farmers of the United States. He is said to have stated that the farmers complain of the quality of wire rather than its price, and asserts that fence wire now used on American farms is brittle and short lived, and that as a result the maverick population is growing on the Western plains and stock are straying from one ranch to another.

The abolition of the duty, he believes, will result in a better class of wire being turned out in this country in order to meet foreign competition.

The foregoing item was published in the American Artisan under the date of February 22, since which time there have come to us numerous letters from wire and fencing concerns that seem to have a distinct bearing upon the subject, and are therefore interesting in this connection. We take pleasure in submitting herewith extracts from them:

An Eastern wire company writes:
"We do not manufacture barb wire or fence wire. We are under the impression, though, that if parties will pay for first quality of wire they will get it. The general tendency, however, is to look for something cheap, and apparently when manufacturers furnish the grade of material they sell they are condemned because the material is not of a higher order. We do not care to have this used in your publication in connection with our name."

The Indiana Steel and Wire Company writes:
"In our opinion it would be an injustice to take the duty off of wire and allow it to remain on the raw or partly finished material, as this would enable our great trust to rid itself of competition in a very short time. While we have a great many wire mills in this country, yet we have but few who produce their own ore and billets. For same they have to depend on those producing their own ore and billets. If barbed and plain wire were put on the free list and raw and partly finished material allowed to remain where it now is, every so-called independent mill would have to close at once. It is generally supposed that the price of finished products governs the price of raw material, but since the days of trusts and combines conditions which used to govern have no significance. In regard to quality of galvanized wire, will say it is poorly protected, but is made as good as the price will permit. They say competition is the life of trade, but it is also the death of quality, in many cases. It's an easy matter to make wire better, but it would be next to impossible to sell it in competition with the cheaper grades at the price one would have to ask for it. In changing the duty on any of the great commodities of our country, a thorough consideration should first be given and all parties affected taken into consideration. We approve any steps taken to better the quality of American goods."

"Yours, truly, INDIANA STEEL AND WIRE COMPANY."

"MUNCIE, IND., February 24, 1908."

The Frost Wire Fence Company writes:

"Regarding the quality of wire now produced in the United States for fencing purposes, will say that in our opinion it does not compare with the wire produced eight to fifteen years ago."

"Hundreds of our agents have reported that the galvanizing is not satisfactory. We know this to be a fact from personal observation. Possibly the removing of the duty on plain annealed as well as galvanized wire will remedy matters more than anything else, as it will enable the smaller manufacturers to buy better goods at satisfactory prices from foreign manufacturers."

"Yours, very truly, M. H. FROST."

"CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 24, 1908."

Adams Steel and Wire Company writes:

"We would say that while it is unquestionably true that the quality of woven and barbed-wire fencing is not as good as it should be, the main reason, we take it, is that the parties using the fencing, as a rule, are not willing to pay for the better class of goods and insist on buying the cheapest to be had, so that where one manufacturer puts up goods first class in every respect and consequently has to charge a higher price for the same, the consumer will almost invariably go to the next dealer and buy the cheapest class of goods. This, of course, makes the quality poorer, and until the consumer is willing to pay for first-class material there is no remedy that we can see. It is simply a case of supply and demand. The consumer demands something cheap and the manufacturer furnishes it."

"Very respectfully, ADAMS STEEL AND WIRE WORKS,
"W. J. ADAMS, President."

"JOLIET, ILL., February 24, 1908."

The Crawfordville Wire and Nail Company writes:

"While galvanizing wire will not stand for galvanizing as it did several years ago, the consumers, or users, are to a large extent to blame for the present condition. They were 'eternally harping' for cheap wire, and in order to cheapen the wire we had to cheapen the galvanizing."

"When galvanized wire was first made it was drawn through a sand wipe and would get a very heavy coat of spelter, while at the present time an asbestos wipe is used, and also a lever wipe. The lever wipe takes off the greater amount of spelter that the wire takes on going through the spelter pan, while with the asbestos wipe the galvanizing is some heavier."

"We think that you will also find that the small manufacturers who do not care for a large tonnage are turning out a better grade of wire than the big mills. We have had no complaint on our product, and owing to the fact that our mill runs twenty-three hours out of twenty-four the year round is surely proof that the material is all right."

"We can not see that the 45 per cent duty off wire fence would help out in any way, as the foreign make of wire is not any better than the wire made in this country, and the removal of the duty would only tend to lower the wages of the laboring man, as we think the manufacturers would try to secure as much out of their products as they are at the present time."

"Yours, truly, CRAWFORDVILLE WIRE AND NAIL CO.,
"C. D. VOIS, General Manager."

"CRAWFORDVILLE, IND., February 24, 1908."

The Up-To-Date Manufacturing Company writes:

"In our opinion the removal of duty on wire in the United States is about the only thing that will ever get us back to a good grade of galvanized wire. We do not make wire, but we use a great deal of it, and we have tried everything in our power to get a good grade. We even offer to pay a premium on extra galvanizing if we can get it, and in cases where we have paid it we find when we get the wire that there is not much difference between it and the other wire."

"We only wish that the Congressmen of our country would get in line with Mr. HAUGEN and support this bill. The time was that you could get good galvanized wire, that the galvanizing would last for years, but it seems now impossible to get any kind of wire that the galvanizing will last over four or five years and some not that. Wire manufacturers claim it is on account of the price they have to make on it that they have to galvanize it so thin that it does not last longer, but the writer has been connected with the fence business for over twenty years and has bought wire for less price than Agriculture to take this matter in hand and see what they can do with it. We are paying to-day and got a great deal better quality. There is not much question in my mind but what they make better wire abroad than in the United States, but the duty makes it impossible to import it. We think it is high time for the American Representatives and Secretary of Agriculture to take this matter in hand and see what they can do with it."

"It is true that competition is very strong, but it is also true that the wire trust will sell their wire fence ready made for practically the same price that they will sell manufacturers the wire to make it with. To make a long story short, we would be in favor of taking the duty off of everything that enters into the manufacture of wire fences, and then after you have done that, take the duty off the fence itself—in fact give the American farmer his fence at the very lowest possible price."

"There are not many who stop to think about it, but the fencing in the United States costs several hundred millions of dollars, or more than all the live stock in it is worth, and when you think that the farmer has to replace this fence about every ten years it is easy to see what a hardship it works on him."

"Yours, truly, UP-TO-DATE MANUFACTURING CO.,
"J. H. SNOVE, President and Manager."

"TERRE HAUTE, IND., February 24, 1908."

A Middle West fence manufacturing Company writes:

"We do not think that the galvanizing is done as well as it was fifteen or twenty years ago, and we have some complaints on account of the wire rusting. We hope the mills will turn out a better quality, although at the low prices at which wire is now sold we do not suppose they can afford to make it much better."

BOLT FROM BILLET POOL WORRIES LARGE MAKERS—POOL ABSORBING PRODUCTS DUMPED BELOW $28 A TON—PIG-IRON MARKET PROCEEDING INDEPENDENTLY OF CLEVELAND MEETING—RAIL MILLS TO START 8008—BELIEVED CAR PLANTS WILL CLOSE—STEEL'S EARNINGS $5,800,000.

PITTSBURG, February 23, 1908.

A bolt by the smaller makers of steel billets, which may, or may not, mean total disruption of the billet pool was a move of interest within the week past, while inclination by all pig-iron dealers to disregard official prices and dispose of their metal at what they would get for it formed a rather strong second item of comment. There is scurrying by the corporation and some large independent interests to check the pronounced cut in steel billet rates inaugurated by smaller producers. Unless something can be done and quickly by the big fellows, the good accomplished by the so-called "billet pool" in past years will be nil.

It had been many years since billets sold below $28 a ton, but last week there was a break and one most pronounced. The smaller makers declare they no longer can withstand pressure. They had to have money and they had steel billets to sell, also purchasers to take them. But the purchasers would not pay $28 a ton, which was the price decided on by the billet pool. The little fellows could get $26.75, perhaps $27 for their billets, not $28, so they decided to unload and they did so.

The corporation is now trying to get all the loose billets at the lower prices and it is understood an effort is to be made to check further disastrous price-cutting and efforts will be made to establish another pool.

WHY POOL WAS CREATED.

It has been only a few months since all the steel-billet interests were represented in a secret meeting in Pittsburgh when the old billet pool was reorganized and all makers of steel promised to stand for the $28 rate. The meeting was occasioned by the fact that some of the smaller makers were thought to be slipping backward. The old billet pool or "gentlemen's agreement" had not been active in years. There was no need for activity since billets were wonderfully strong and so long as prices remained at or above $28 there was no cause for alarm. The fact that small dealers have broken away and are selling at rates much lower than $28 causes no end of worry among the big fellows.

Mr. HAUGEN. These letters and clippings raise a very important question—that is, Should not the billets and rods be included and be put on the free list? The contention is, if not, we will drive the independent manufacturers—those who do not manufacture the partly finished article—out of business; that the trust dictates prices and controls the output, and that the independent manufacturers are now at its mercy. Nobody wishes to cripple or drive out of business any worthy or legitimate enterprise. I certainly have no such desire. To the contrary, I want to protect them.

Let us see if this objection is well grounded. If we admit that the trust controls the output and prices of billets and rods, and if the independent manufacturers are its customers, the trust will, of course, put the price up to the very highest point, but not so high but that the manufacturers will be able to compete with foreign manufacturers. If it did the manufacturer would have to go out of business, and the foreign manufacturers would sell the wire, and the trust would be without customers for its billets and rods. Therefore, if the price on wire controls the price on the partly finished article, and if we remove the duty on wire and thereby reduce its price, or improve its quality by importing wire, we would then compel the trust to furnish billets or rods that will make wire equally as good as that imported, and also to make a living price to the home manufacturers, such as would enable them to meet foreign competition. It goes without saying that the trust is compelled to protect its customers, or the independent manufacturer, in order to sell its product, and it is not clear to me that placing the wire on the free list will work a hardship to the independent manufacturer.

It is claimed they are now at the mercy of the trust, and in all probability always will be; but if the duty on the partly finished articles, such as billets and rods, is not needed as protection to labor and worthy and legitimate American industries, but is fostering trusts and monopolies and enabling them to pay large dividends on watered stock, then by all means remove the duty. But before discussing trusts I want to dispose of my first proposition.

The letter and clippings are of high authority, and I take it nobody will dispute the fact that the wire manufactured and sold to-day is much inferior to that manufactured and sold twenty or thirty years ago. Gentlemen, if this is true, and there is no doubt about it; and if by removing the duty, a better quality of wire will be furnished by our domestic manufacturers, or can be imported and sold for the price the inferior domestic wire is now being sold for, then why not remove the duty? But you say that the duty is necessary to protect our home manufactures—that iron and wire is now being imported notwithstanding the high duty. That is true, but that is a special grade of wire, such as is not and can not be manufactured here. Barbed wire and wire fencing are not separately enumerated in the returns of imports rendered to the Department of Commerce and Labor by the collectors of customs, being included with other articles under general heads.

If you will turn to pages 41 and 42 of the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Statistics, on imported merchandise entered for consumption in the United States and duties collected thereon in 1907, you will find the total as follows:

* Countervailing duty.

Mr. HAUGEN. You will see by the table on page 42, that of the 569,250.95 pounds of wire not smaller than No. 13 gauge, 398,475.90 pounds was valued at more than 4 cents per pound, and paid a duty of 40 per cent plus 1½ cents per pound. Of the 149,132 pounds of wire coated with zinc, and so forth, 121,065 pounds was valued at more than 4 cents per pound, and paid 40 per cent duty, and 15,117 pounds of it was smaller than No. 13 wire gauge, and paid a duty of 2.2 cents per pound, while only 12,950 pounds was not smaller than No. 13 wire gauge, and paid 1.9 cents duty per pound. It will be seen, then, that the wire imported is of a very high grade, and does not come in competition with the fence wire manufactured and sold here.

If our manufacturers can and will not furnish the better quality of wire, why deprive the consumer of the privilege of buying it elsewhere? Will anybody contend that the manufacturers are entitled to this protection, or will anybody contend that our manufacturers or laborers need any protective tariff on this article against foreign manufacturers and labor, even with our high-priced labor? Certainly not.

I call your attention to page 7399 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 24, 1906:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania name me any steel mill in the world that can make steel rails cheaper than they are made at Pittsburgh? Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania name me any iron furnace in the world that can make pig iron cheaper than Birmingham?

Mr. DALELL. I think not.

Nobody will question this authority. Both are experts and represent districts where the largest manufacturers of these articles are located. If pig iron and steel rails can be made as cheaply here as any place in the world, of course wire can. A large amount of iron is being exported every year and sold in competition with the world, which also goes to show that it can be made as cheaply here as elsewhere. With our advantages in transportation, with our skilled labor, with our improved machinery, with our abundance of ore and fuel, our manufacturers of wire can and would produce wire equally as good and as cheaply as any other country without a protective tariff. They would make less money, as it costs more to manufacture the better quality, but they can make, and will have to make it, if the duty is removed, and that without any hardship to labor or anyone. Even if the trust has to squeeze a little water out of its stock, what of it? The trust has robbed the consumer by imposing on him high prices and furnishing a poor quality of wire, and the consumer is now entitled to some consideration.

More than 400,000 tons of this wire is manufactured and sold every year. The average price at the mills is estimated at about $52.21 per ton, the total value being $22,511,149.43. Add to this the cost of transportation and the charges and profits to the merchants and jobbers, and you will easily have thirty millions of dollars. This means that if a superior quality of wire can be made here or imported and sold for the same price that the inferior wire is bought and sold for now the farmers are taxed more than $20,000,000 every five years by reason of the fact that an inferior quality of wire is being sold them.

If our manufacturers can and will furnish us with a good quality of wire, I would not object to a duty on wire in order to protect them against foreign cheap labor, if such protection is needed; but if the manufacturers of wire have, and I understand many of them have, combined and formed a trust, watered their stock, and entered into a conspiracy to defraud the consumers by manufacturing and selling an inferior wire at a price equal to that which a good quality can be furnished for, then that is a different thing, and there can be no justification for it. Manufacturers have and can make as cheap and as good wire as manufacturers in other countries, and as good as was made here twenty years ago; and the purchaser is entitled to just as good wire as is made in other countries, especially if it can be made as good here as elsewhere. If the manufacturers insist on making and selling, at present prices, an inferior wire when a better quality can be made and sold as cheaply as imported wire can be made and sold, then they are not entitled to protection.

It has been the policy of the Republican party to encourage manufacturers by giving them a protective tariff, even if they were making an inferior quality and charging higher prices, but that was with a view of stimulating competition and encouraging industries and with the expectation that in time the articles might be perfected. This is entirely a different proposition. We know that the manufacturers know how to make a durable, serviceable, and economical article, but do refrain from doing so because the inferior article can be made cheaper, and because outside competition has been cut off by reason of a protective tariff, and because the farmers and consumers have to buy their make. This is of course unjust and indefensible. The same holds true to a large extent as to steel sheets, railroad irons, billets, rods, and various other irons.

Gentlemen, the iron and steel trusts and the iron and steel schedules need attention. What is true as to the quality of wire manufactured and sold is probably true as to all kinds of steel—sheets, wire and iron nails, construction and bridge iron, railroad iron, and other iron. This is undoubtedly the cause of so many accidents on railroads, and a loss of so many lives. I have confined my amendment to wire fencing, as the investigation of the Department was confined to wire fencing, and I did not feel justified in including items of which I had no special information.

The principle of protection, as before stated, is to protect American industries and American labor, but not to foster and protect fraud and deception, nor is it to build up or to foster an industry that is not or can not be made a success in this country, or one that has ceased to exist. As an illustration, take coffee. We produce no coffee, and it can not be produced here, hence it is admitted free of duty. On the other hand, sugar is a necessity, and of equal importance, but sugar can be and is produced in this country, but not as cheaply as in other countries. We manufacture sugar from sugar beet. Cuba, on the other hand, makes sugar out of cane. The cost of seed to plant an acre of sugar beet is about $3, besides the ground must be prepared for seeding; it requires more cultivation; the expense of topping and harvesting is greater, which makes the cost of growing it much greater than that of sugar cane. In Cuba the cane is planted once in nine or ten years; it requires but little cultivation; an acre of ground in Cuba will yield from one-third to one-half more sugar than an acre of sugar beet in the United States. The cost of labor in Cuba is from 30 to 50 cents per day; here from $1.50 to $2.50; and in order to protect our sugar producers in this country, the Republican party placed a tariff on sugar of $1.65 per hundred.

Again, years ago, when our supply of logs was believed to be inexhaustible, in order to protect the labor and manufacturers, a tariff was placed on lumber. Logs were and are admitted free. Now conditions have changed. Our supply of logs is practically exhausted; and when the raw material is exhausted, and no raw material is or can be imported, that industry must necessarily cease. Therefore, according to Republican doctrine, there is no need of duty on lumber when that industry ceases to exist; and according to the reports and statements made by our Forester, Mr. Pinchot, our supply of logs, especially white pine, is practically exhausted. And I take it that if the tariff is to be revised, the lumber schedule will receive consideration and undoubtedly should be put on the free list.

The same is true as to wood pulp and paper. This is a matter that is receiving much attention, and a matter that is worthy of the most careful consideration. I listened with much pleasure to the eloquent and very able speech made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL], who is a trustee of an estate and a director in a large pulp company. He is therefore in a position to know and is an authority. His speech gives much valuable information and throws much light on the subject. And with the permission of the House, I will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1908, pages 2107, 2108, 2109, 2112, and 2113, a part of what he had to say as to the tariff on pulp and the need of such tariff, how paper is made, as to the supply of wood, and the cost of manufacturing paper:

We have up to this time failed, as far as I can learn by reading the comments in the newspapers or by the addresses on this floor, to ascertain one single reason why it should be done. No facts, no data, have been given. It seems to have been assumed as a self-evident proposition. Therefore, inasmuch as I myself, as trustee of an estate and a director in one of the large pulp companies of this country, have a certain personal interest in the matter, it seems to me my duty to exploit the subject.

Now, in order that this may properly be understood, it is necessary that I should in a sort of academic way state how paper is made. This may seem to be a matter of supererogation, and yet you can not understand the paper business and the pulp business unless you know how paper and pulp are made. Pulp is made out of the fiber of wood. There is nothing in paper, except coloring matter, but wood. There is nothing but wood in the paper which I hold before you. This wood, reduced to fiber by a mechanical process, is placed in an immense tank of water, and then the fiber is taken off by a paper machine, on a cloth which revolves about rollers until it comes out a sheet, and to come out a sheet, which is absolutely indispensable, it is necessary that the fiber should be matted together, should hold together. The only wood thus far found, even under the inventive genius of the American people, whose fiber is sufficiently long and strong and of the proper color to mat together and make news paper is spruce. You can make paper out of cottonwood and hemlock and pine. You can make it out of cornstalks, but you can not make it so that it will sell, because under the present machinery and processes by which paper is made you have got to have a long, strong, tenacious fiber, and the only wood that is known which produces that fiber is spruce wood. Now, in making news paper that sap is not taken out of the fiber. Therefore, when that fiber is matted together it has all the moisture in it.

Mr. TIRRELL. I was speaking about the subject of spruce in New York. More than one-half of the news paper of this country is made in the State of New York, and I will say to the gentleman, in addition, that the increase in the manufacture of paper has been so wonderful, indeed marvelous, in this country since 1870 that the United States is now making more paper—almost as much paper as the rest of the civilized world.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Print paper?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes. In New York the State has prohibited the cutting of timber of any kind for twenty years over a territory covering 4,000 square miles. There are 3,588,803 acres of available spruce timber lands in New York. But the Adirondack Park reservation contains 2,807,760 acres of this, leaving 781,760 acres only for pulp supplies. Now, when we get to Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, we find there that spruce wood has become very largely denuded, and they are absolutely obliged to run their paper mills in those States by receiving their supply of paper from the Province of Quebec. They have been very wasteful, apparently, in the natural supply in their own country, but whether wasteful or not, those great mills are now dependent upon a foreign country to keep the mills going. I speak of these things in order to come to the most important, and really the only important, consideration in connection with the tariff on wood pulp. There were 2,800,000 cords of spruce wood from the United States used last year in making pulp.

There was obtained from Canada 736,000 cords, according to the official returns, but according to the estimates made in Canada, from 800,000 to 1,000,000 cords of pulp logs were exported to this country, necessary to keep our mills going; and the importance of maintaining our hold in order to secure wood to manufacture paper from was so great that paper manufacturers, than whom there are no more alert, far-sighted, and prophetic business men in the country, early saw that in order to conserve the spruce supply of the United States, not destroying small timber, but only cutting it out as it ought to be done so that the forest would replace itself, they must have supplies from the other side of the border on which to draw, not wholly, but only partly, so that they could properly cut down the spruce on the timber lands which they own, located in the United States, to supply the necessary deficiencies from the timber exports from the Province of Quebec. The importance of the tariff, therefore, in regard to the maintenance of this great industry in our country—and there are 108 paper and pulp mills in the State of New York alone, and New York is dependent to run these mills upon the spruce which they receive from the Dominion of Canada, and will become more and more so as the years pass by—in order to maintain those mills, to keep those mills going, it was not necessary to have a little playmate tariff of 15 per cent. That does not amount to anything; that is only one-third of the average tariff rates of the Dingley bill. There is not a paper mill in the United States but what could successfully maintain its competition with the Canadian mills if that little tariff of 15 per cent was the only consideration. Our paper sells higher and is better than any paper made on the other side of the line. We get better prices for it in England and on the Continent than they can get for Canadian paper, because it is better made and of higher quality, and the paper manufacturers of the United States, if that was the only thing connected with the tariff, would come in here and request with all celerity and, as the eloquent gentleman from Missouri said, let any of these bills engineered by the "big five" go into immediate enactment.

The little joker, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said the other day about the Standard Oil tariff, the little joker to the tariff of 15 per cent, is what is needed and what has preserved this industry in our country.

But they attached this provision to that tariff so that in case Canada should impose an export duty upon logs by what is known as a "countervailing duty" our Government could impose an equal duty upon any pulp or paper if they attempted to import or sell it in this country. That, gentlemen, as I now shall endeavor to show, has been the sole salvation of the paper mills of New York, and, if continued, will be the salvation of the paper mills of the country in the years to come. In Canada, if anywhere in the world, is the inexhaustible supply. In Ontario alone the pulp area is 80,000 square miles, or approximately 51,000,000 acres, to say nothing of greater areas still in Quebec, Labrador, and the great Northwest.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is there any tariff on the spruce wood?

Mr. TIRRELL. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How would the export tax affect the value of the log on this side?

Mr. TIRRELL. Logs are admitted free. There is no export duty. I will now proceed and inform the gentlemen and the House what the condition is that is confronting us in regard to this great industry. And, gentlemen, right upon that point I want to give you a few figures as to the extent of it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] told me a few minutes ago that one-third of all the capital in that great State which was invested in manufacturing enterprises was invested in the paper and pulp industry. The product of the pulp and paper mills of this country amounts to over $200,000,000. There are $300,000,000 of invested capital, and $32,000,000 yearly paid in wages.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us how many companies are in this International Paper Company?

Mr. TIRRELL. Twenty-four.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman tell me whether a newspaper publisher can not get a rate from any of these so-called "independent" companies of the country?

Mr. TIRRELL. That statement has been absolutely denied time and time again.

Mr. GLASS. Now, I am a newspaper publisher and I assert here you can not get a rate from an independent company.

Mr. TIRRELL. I know the gentleman is entirely mistaken in his position; I do not care whether he publishes a paper or not.

Mr. GLASS. I publish two, and I avow here I can not get a quotation from a so-called "independent" mill in this country.

Mr. TIRRELL. I decline any further to yield to discuss the question. I want you to bear these things in mind. There is an increase in labor cost between 30 and 40 per cent, which is one-third of all that is paid out in the mill itself, and two-thirds, if you reckon all the labor that goes into paper, going back to the forest where the timber is cut.

Mr. HAUGEN. While I do not intend at this time to go into an extensive discussion of the wood-pulp or paper question, I wish to say, if it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL]—and there is no question about that, as it comes from high authority—that labor has only advanced from 30 to 40 per cent, and if material (wood pulp) has only advanced from 30 to 40 per cent, then the average increased cost is only about 25 per cent. If, as contended by some, there is a trust, and there is no doubt about that, and if quotations can not be had by independent mills, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and if it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL], that the product of the pulp and paper mills of this country amounts to over $200,000,000 annually, with only $300,000,000 invested capital and only $32,000,000 annually paid in wages, which is claimed is one-third of all that is paid out, or one-third of the cost, then the total cost is only ninety-six million and the net profits are more than one hundred and four million. If our supply of pulp logs is exhausted, and if 736,000 cords of pulp wood has to be imported annually, and if our paper mills are dependent upon foreign countries to keep our mills going, and if the 15 per cent duty is not needed, then there can be no question but that the 15 per cent duty, or $6 per ton, on paper and $1.63 on wood pulp should be removed, certainly to the extent recommended by the President in his message, a part of which I will read:

WOOD PULP AND PAPER FREE.

I am of the opinion, however, that one change in the tariff could with advantage be made forthwith. Our forests need every protection, and one method of protecting them would be to put upon the free list wood pulp, with a corresponding reduction upon paper made from wood pulp, when they come from any country that does not put an export duty upon them.

And I would add "or on logs or pulp wood."

In conclusion let me say that I believe and contend that inasmuch as American wage-earners and American capital help to maintain and contribute to our national prosperity, growth, and greatness, they should be given protection against foreign manufacturers and producers who pay no taxes here, who pay less for labor, and who can afford to sell for a less price by reason of cheap labor. But that does not imply that there should be a tariff on all products, certainly not on those which do not need protection, or such as will foster and protect fraud, deception, trusts, monopolies, and combinations. Every Republican tariff act has contained a large list of articles on the free list. If you will turn to pages 194 to 203, volume 30, United States Statutes at Large, you will find that the Dingley Act contains a free list of more than 200 articles and classes of articles.

As before stated, I am a protectionist, but in view of the existing trusts, monopolies, combinations, high prices, and the conditions of our forests, I believe that the tariff schedules, such as billets, wire rods, steel sheets, lumber, wood pulp, and paper, should receive immediate attention and the duties modified if not totally removed. And until the trusts manufacture a fence wire and furnish the American consumer with a better quality, a more rust-resisting wire, a quality equally as good as that furnished by other countries, or as good as that manufactured here years ago, greater in efficiency and economy than that which it is now manufacturing and selling, I favor the admittance, free of duty, wire suitable for this purpose.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the Record upon the subject of American passports.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For amount required to be added to appropriation expenses, Revenue-Cutter Service, 1908, to carry out the provisions of acts of April 16 and May 11, 1908, for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $54,227.55.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, after line 21, insert: "Hereafter the salary of each assistant appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York shall be at the rate of $4,000 per annum."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if this is the same rate—

Mr. SHERLEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman if this is the same rate carried in the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means to the House?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is the same rate the salaries have always borne to the appraisers' salary, reported from time to time. Last year it was $3,500. The appraisers' salaries were raised on this bill last year from six to eight thousand, and this is to give the assistant appraisers the same rate, preserving the proportion between the salaries that they have always had.

Mr. BUTLER. Is this in favor of New York alone?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The assistant appraisers at the port of New York have always had a salary of 50 per cent of that which was given to the appraisers. Last year the salary of the appraisers was raised from $6,000 to $8,000, and by this amendment the assistant appraisers would get the same proportion.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The point of order has been reserved. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Document No. 880, of this session, $20,848.90, together with a further sum sufficient to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information. On page 23 there is an appropriation of $20,000 for the purpose of paying judgments against the District of Columbia. Why should the money be appropriated out of the Treasury to pay judgments against the District of Columbia, and not the usual provision that one-half of it at least should be paid out of the revenues of the District?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that if he will turn over to page 24 he will find that all of these items are paid one-half out of the revenues of the District and one-half out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is all right; I did not see that provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a series of provisions relating to the District of Columbia, and the last paragraph states the proportion that is to come out of the funds of the District and of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For increased pay of officers and enlisted men of the Army, under the provisions of the Army appropriation act approved May 11, 1908, $1,250,000.

Mr. HAY. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if this paragraph just read provides for the additional pay for the Army?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I do not know what paragraph the gentleman is referring to. Is it the first paragraph under "military establishment?"

Mr. HAY. It is the first paragraph on page 25, "increased pay of officers and enlisted men."

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the amount made necessary by the increase of pay of officers and men authorized at this session.

Mr. HAY. The sum appropriated is $1,250,000, and it is for the fiscal year from the 11th of May until the 1st of July.

Mr. TAWNEY. From the 11th of May until the 1st of July the increased pay authorized by the last military appropriation act is $1,250,000.

Mr. HAY. So that for the whole year it will be $10,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And the $7,000,000 carried in the Army appropriation bill will not be sufficient by $3,000,000 to meet the increase made by that bill, and there will be a deficiency next year of $3,000,000 on that item alone.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman is entirely correct, for the reason that this estimate for the remainder of this fiscal year is made by the Department under the law which we passed at this session of Congress as they construe it. Now, that amount will meet the requirements of that law for about forty-five days. And if it takes $1,250,000 to meet the requirements for forty-five days, the gentleman can easily estimate the amount required for the year.

Mr. HAY. I have figured it up, and there will be a deficiency of $3,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the formal amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

For expressage, fuel, books and blanks, stationery, advertising, furniture and interior fittings for general storehouses and pay offices in navy-yards; coffee mills and repairs thereto; expenses of naval clothing factory and machinery for same, postage, telegrams, telephones, tolls, ferrages, yeoman's stores, safes, newspapers, ice, and other incidental expenses, $10,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, on April 2 I addressed the House in connection with my amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill intended to abolish gambling in cotton on the exchanges, and in my remarks I made specific reference to the standing of New York as a cotton market. Numerous comments have appeared in the public press on my remarks, criticising them in certain particulars. I now wish to refer to some of these comments and to prove by statistics such of my former statements as have been criticised.

I will first read an editorial from the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of April 18, as follows:

SYSTEMATIZING THE COTTON TRADE.

Among the many subjects before the annual convention of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers in Boston, as well as before gatherings of cotton growers in the past, that of systematizing the trade in cotton on a more satisfactory basis takes a prominent place. The prevailing dissatisfaction with the methods of the exchanges at New York and New Orleans, which tend to excess in speculation, is causing an agitation which is likely to lead to some radical change. If the exchanges do not take the lead in the needed reforms they are liable to be superseded altogether as a leading agency of the business of cotton trading. They have not only been under criticism and subject to indiscriminating denunciation in recent years, but have been undergoing an official investigation of which the report is still somewhat anxiously awaited, while Congress has been importuned to take action which would practically put them out of business. The New York Cotton Exchange has been particularly under fire of the growers and has few defenders among manufacturers, on account of the manner of its dealing in options and futures, which is often characterized as sheer gambling on the fluctuation of prices which is largely manipulated by the traders.

Conditions in the cotton trade have changed a great deal in recent times, and the methods of handling it have not kept pace with requirements. Planters do not as in former times depend upon marketing the crop promptly in the picking and ginning season in order to raise money to pay debts, and are not so much at the mercy of middlemen. They are establishing warehouses quite extensively for storing the product and distributing their sales more generally over the months following the harvest season. The through bill of lading from centers of production in the cotton region to destination in manufacturing districts or abroad has greatly lessened accumulation at distributing points. Cotton for export goes largely from southern ports and that for New England factories goes on through bills to the purchasers, and there is little "spot" cotton disposed of in New York by the traders. Mr. BURLESON, in supporting his bill, intended to put a stop to speculating in futures, which he has offered as a "rider" on the agricultural appropriation bill in the hope of thus getting it through, quoted figures the other day purporting to show that while 205,859 bales of cotton were received in New York in 1900-1901, the number has decreased gradually and was only 23,108 in 1906-7. Nevertheless, over 100,000,000 bales were sold on the exchange last year, and the Texas Congressman charged that the cost of these speculative operations in commissions, interest on margins, and other expenses amounted to many millions which must indirectly come out of producers or consumers or both.

Mr. MacColl, in his address before the convention in Boston advocating the establishment of an exchange there, was severe in his criticism of prevailing methods and favored a plan like that at Bremen, where the exchange membership is made up of merchant dealers and manufacturers and there is no trading in futures. The claim is made that the prices are successfully established through the relation of supply and demand and kept from undue fluctuation without the fever of speculation that prevails where there is so much dealing in fictitious transactions and so little interest on the part of the traders in actual cotton for use in manufacturing. The most serious complaint against the New York Exchange has been due to the multiplicity of grades, allowing deliveries on contracts of cotton that is of no use to manufacturers and failing to supply what they want, with a settlement of differences which are fixed for an entire year. In the great bulk of cases selling for future delivery means no delivery at all, and much practically worthless cotton passes for nominal delivery like counters in a gambling game.

The New York Exchange has been recognizing the need of reform in cotton trading and especially in the rules of exchange dealing and has somewhat modified its range of grades for delivery which formerly numbered about thirty. Its committee has been advocating a system of certification of cotton in warehouses in the South, guaranteeing grades and quality, and dealing in certificates or warrants on the exchange, which shall call for the grades required, with a display of samples here according to which deliveries shall be made to purchasers. There seems to be in this suggestion the germ of an improved system and Mr. MacColl appeared to approve of it but claimed that the place for working it out was not New York but a city in New England, "where two-thirds of the spindles of the country are located and 2,500,000 bales of cotton are annually consumed." "It is in New England," he said, "that most of the finer class of goods are made, and especially as regards staple cotton a central market would be of great advantage." This is plausible, but with a properly developed warehouse and certificate system the chief exchange might be more advantageously located at the financial and banking center than at a city about which the manufacturing interests center. The trader, as the intermediary between the producer and the consumer, the medium for bringing demand and supply together and adjusting their relation in the fixing of price, can hardly be eliminated. The mechanism of exchange is necessary, and properly managed is an economy in business. In the cotton trade it has got out of order and in bad adjustment and needs to be better adapted to its purpose, but it can not be safely cast aside.

This editorial was followed on the 21st by a letter addressed to the editor of the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin from Mr. Alfred B. Shepperson, which reads as follows:

COTTON AT NEW YORK.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE METROPOLITAN MARKET IN ACTUAL DEALINGS.

Editor of The Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

SIR: An editorial in the issue of 18th instant of your valuable journal does such injustice to New York as a cotton market that I beg that you will give space to a brief statement showing the annual receipts, exports, and sales of cotton of New York since 1900 and the number of bales delivered on "futures" contracts each season during the same period.

It is true that of what statisticians call "net receipts" only 23,000 bales were received in New York during the year ending August 31, 1907. To avoid counting the same cotton more than once in the statistics of receipts it is the unvarying custom to count the cotton as "net receipts" at the port it first reaches. On its arrival at other ports it is counted in what is known as "gross receipts." From its geographical position it is evident that all cotton reaching New York by water must have previously arrived at some other port and been counted in its net receipts. If a lot of cotton should be shipped from an interior town of South Carolina to Boston by way of steamer from Charleston to New York and thence to Boston it would be counted in the "net receipts" of Charleston and in the "gross receipts" of New York and Boston. Any other course would result in the same cotton being counted three times in the commercial crop.

Some recent speeches in Congress and the editorial in your paper of 18th instant would create the very erroneous impression that New York received and handled only 23,000 bales of cotton in the year ending August 31, 1907. The files of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin show that 480,000 bales of cotton were actually exported from New York to Europe and the East during that season, and, of course, it must have been received first. The receipts at the southern ports are almost entirely "net receipts," so that the figures of net receipts fairly represent the quantity of cotton received at these ports; but New York gets cotton from all southern ports. According to the official records of the New York Cotton Exchange the receipts, exports, and sales of "spot cotton" at this port for each year ending August 31 were as follows:

	Gross receipts.	Exports.	Sales.
	Bales.	Bales.	Bales.
1900-1901	1,251,000	633,000	92,000
1901-2	1,207,000	687,000	114,000
1902-3	1,213,000	492,000	123,000
1903-4	1,171,000	494,000	245,000
1904-5	1,439,000	660,000	104,000
1905-6	1,263,000	514,000	226,000
1906-7	1,413,000	480,000	118,000

During the above seven seasons 773,000 bales were sold for spinners and 248,000 for export. The quantity of cotton actually delivered on "futures" contracts during each season since 1900 was as follows:

	Bales.
1900-1901	375,000
1901-2	397,000
1902-3	600,000
1903-4	283,000
1904-5	446,000
1905-6	478,000
1906-7	460,000

The figures for the number of bales of cotton delivered upon "futures" contracts, as well as all other statistics in this communication, are from the records of the New York Cotton Exchange.

As a matter of fact the New York receipts and exports and sales of spot cotton have for many years been much larger than those of any other American ports except Galveston, New Orleans, and Savannah in the order named.

I am confident that your sense of justice will induce you to give prominence to this letter in view of the erroneous impression which would naturally be conveyed by the editorial of 18th instant.

Yours, very truly,

ALFRED B. SHEPPERSON.

In compliance with the request contained in this letter of Mr. Shepperson's, the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, in its issue of April 22, had the following editorial:

NEW YORK AS A COTTON MARKET.

In discussing the subject of marketing cotton the other day we cited from a speech of Mr. BURLINSON of Texas, in the House of Representatives, a statement regarding the receipts of cotton at New York, which gave an altogether unfair impression of the importance of the cotton market of this city, without making the qualification or explanation necessary to correct that impression. This was done in a letter from Mr. Alfred B. Shepperson, which was printed in connection with our cotton-market reports yesterday, but lest it escape the attention of some who received the erroneous impression it is only fair to present the main point as conspicuously as the statement of the Texas Congressman was cited.

Mr. BURLINSON, in criticizing the methods of the cotton exchange, sought to belittle New York as a market for cotton, and in order to show, he said, "exactly how much cotton has been received" here in recent years, he gave figures from "a book prepared by one of the numerous defenders of the New York Exchange and its practices," representing that the receipts in 1906-7 amounted to only 23,108 bales. From this he concluded that "this exchange could not render much aid in marketing cotton if the cotton did not go there." Mr. Shepperson explains that this figure represents only what are called "net receipts," or receipts at the port which the cotton first reaches. It is only what came from the fields directly to New York and does not include that which comes by water from southern ports after being counted as "net receipts" there.

Mr. Shepperson gives figures compiled from the official records of the cotton exchange, which show that the gross receipts at New York in 1906-7 were 1,413,000 bales, which was considerably more than the average for the six preceding years, in which Mr. BURLINSON sought to show a heavy decline, being exceeded only in 1904-5. The quantity exported from here was 480,000 bales and the sales of "spot cotton" amounted to 118,000 bales. The quantity actually delivered on future contracts was 460,000 bales. These figures are undoubtedly authentic and show that those of Mr. BURLINSON were wittingly or unwittingly quite false in the impression they were intended to convey. New York has for many years ranked next to Galveston, New Orleans, and Savannah in receipts, exports, and "spot sales" of cotton.

Further criticism of my statement and a boast of the standing of New York as a cotton market appeared in an open letter by Henry Hentz, a member of the New York Cotton Exchange, which was published in the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin on April 23. It is as follows:

NEW YORK AS TO COTTON RANKS THIRD AS A SPOT MARKET.

Editor The Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

Sir: My partners and I felt very sorry to read in your issue of 18th, on the editorial page, an article headed "Systematizing the Cotton Trade," which wrongfully attacks the New York Cotton Exchange, as shown in Mr. A. B. Shepperson's admirable letter printed in your issue of this date.

The article will be seized upon by men who are ignorant of the cotton trade here as justifying their opinion of the exchange. Our contract is practically the same as those of the New Orleans and Liverpool exchanges. In doing away with the quarter grades the number of grades deliverable here on contracts has been reduced.

Our system is all right. The clamor for delivery of only the grades the splendor of fine yarns wants is nonsense. The buyers in the southern markets have, as a rule, to take round lots, and then select such cotton as will suit their orders for export or for American mills. Our contracts, as you know, permits delivery of any grade between and including good ordinary (white and blue) and fair, also tinged cotton from strict good middling to low middling, and in stained cotton not below middling. The amount of poor staple cotton in the certificated stock is practically nil. During the past season low-grade cotton was in poor demand, because no cotton mill, in selling goods ahead, would risk having them rejected as not coming up to the quality sold, and even now we hear that the same precaution is being taken to avoid the goods being rejected. New York, as shown by Mr. Shepperson, ranks next to Savannah as a spot cotton market.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that all the interior towns in the South ship cotton on through bills of lading to our eastern mills and to Europe, consequently, as cotton markets, the ports have lost their importance. I much doubt if, with the exception of New Orleans, 10 per cent of the receipts at the other ports is cotton to be sold there. The residue is shipped to the eastern mills and Europe from the railway stations to the ocean steamers; therefore, Mr. Shepperson is right from the statistics he gave in his letter, in saying that New York comes next to Savannah as a cotton market.

When the New York contract in 1872-73 did not permit the delivery of cotton below low middling, the complaints from the South that our contract was a gambling one were loud, that it shut out useful cotton below that grade, the change was made. Now the clamor is raised that low grades are deliverable, which, as stated above, is permitted by the New Orleans and Liverpool exchanges.

As one of the few charter members of our exchange (only seven now survive the 100 in 1870) I take pride in being still connected with it. Very few outside of the cotton trade realize the usefulness of the exchanges, that if they were abolished we should return to the chaotic conditions that existed prior to 1870, when the changes in prices were violent, and failures were plentiful. The cotton exchanges prevent prices from going too high or too low. In 1868 and 1869 cotton in Liverpool ranged from 7½d. to 13½d. No one wants a return to such conditions. The planters then sold before the advance was had.

Very truly, yours,

HENRY HENTZ, of Henry Hentz & Co.

Mr. Chairman, I will first address myself to the claim made by Messrs. Hentz and Shepperson that the gross movements of cotton to New York proves that that market is holding its own in contradistinction to my claim, viz, that the net receipts have been steadily dwindling and showed the decline of New York as a market. I submit a tabulation on the subject which (I think) conclusively bears out my contention and further confirms my position that as a spot market it has fallen into a state of decadence.

It is a well-established commercial fact that merchandise or commodities (of any kind) seek the best markets—those offering the best inducements for profit—and as a logical sequence, stocks tend to converge to such marts.

Inasmuch as strenuous (though, as I think, untenable) objection is urged to using the net receipts, taken from their own statistical tables, as a measure of New York's standing as a cotton market, I will adopt another.

The tabulation I now offer shows the stock of cotton held in New York and New Orleans in the last week in December for the past thirty years and also the percentage said stock was of the entire crop for each year. In order to make more plain the real condition I also submit a table showing same by decades.

Stocks of cotton in New York and New Orleans in last week of December and the per cent to the total commercial crop, by decades.

	New York.		New Orleans.
	Bales.	Per cent.	Bales.	Per cent.
1877-1886 (yearly average).....	154,000	3.1	358,000	6.1
1887-1896 (yearly average).....	210,000	2.6	400,000	5.1
1897-1906 (yearly average).....	124,000	1.1	403,000	3.6

Analyzing these figures what do you find? Take them by decades. In the second decade, 1887 to 1896, a gain over the first is made in New York and New Orleans of about 11 per cent; but the crux comes in the third decade (1897-1906), the latest one, where New Orleans shows a slight gain and New York loses 40 per cent. And this, too, in face of the size of the crop, which jumps from an average of about 7,836,000 to 11,210,000 bales, an increase of over 40 per cent.

Again—or worse still—while the stock of the last decade at New Orleans is larger than that of the first decade by about 11 per cent, that of New York for the corresponding period is 32 per cent less, although the size of the crop rose from an average of 5,911,000 bales to 11,210,000 bales, a gain of 90 per cent.

As stated in slightly different form, the relative position of the average stocks of New York and New Orleans in the three decades has changed 43 per cent against New York during which time the volume of the crop increased 90 per cent.

Can Messrs. Hentz and Shepperson contradict or controvert what is here stated? And do these figures sustain the claim made by them and the New York Journal of Commerce that New York is holding her own as a spot market?

Is it possible that there are no reasons for this? A few years ago cotton firms were bringing cotton to New York to stay there, and against which they banked. Several of these firms retired from business at the end of 1896, when the arbitrary rule of fixing differences in values between grades was adopted; but others were left to continue said operations notwithstanding this uneconomical legislation on the part of the New York Exchange. Just here arises the point. Those pernicious regulations—uncommercial, unjust, and selfish—of the exchange began in 1896, and it is well known that some of those cotton brokers who then retired saw that a blow had been given the exchange and felt that the end was in sight. A mere glance at the stocks in New York after 1896 will serve to show how rapidly and permanently the amount carried there dwindled.

Mr. Chairman, I again insist that the gross movement of cotton to New York does not fairly indicate or measure its standing as a cotton market. Thousands of bales of cotton may pass through there on through bills of lading to mills in the East or for export to Europe; but what bearing does this have on its importance as a cotton market? One might as well claim that Sabine Pass or Port Arthur in Texas are markets for cotton of growing importance because statistics show that the volume of cotton passing through these ports is steadily increasing—this deduction is as logical as the claim put forward by the defenders of the New York Exchange. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to be absolutely fair.

Let me present New York as a cotton market as shown by sales of cotton and exports from that city and New Orleans covering a period of a quarter of a century from 1881-82 to 1906-07. I have compiled a table showing averages of five-year periods and the percentage the sales and exports form of the total crop. The conditions revealed by this table will prove quite interesting, if not enlightening, to the defenders of these exchanges, both of which, by this table, are shown to be falling into a decadent state, and are rapidly ceasing to be of benefit or importance to the cotton trade.

*The crop figures are as published by the Bureau of the Census and those of sales and exports as published in Cotton Facts by Alfred B. Shepperson.

Mr. Chairman, to the average layman statistical figures are always confusing, and when handled by an adept can be made quite mystifying, but when they are juggled by experts whose interests are endangered they can become, and are frequently used, so as to be grossly misleading.

I am not an adept, neither am I an expert, statistician, but I submit that this table and these figures bearing on the status of New York as a cotton market should be and will prove clear and convincing to all but those willfully blind.

Mr. Chairman, the averages of the actual sales of cotton in New York for the five-year period ending with the year 1887 was 453,000 bales, compared with 148,000 for the five-year period ending with the year 1907, a loss of 67 per cent. The exports from New York during the earlier period mentioned amounted to 776,600 bales, compared with 527,800 for the last period, a loss of 20 per cent.

The fact should also be kept in mind that the size of the crop increased from an average during the first period of 6,289,980 to 11,705,674 bales for the latter period. This table also shows that the sales and exports of cotton in New York in 1881-82 constituted 20.9 per cent of the entire crop and that since then, reckoning by the five-year period, she has evidenced her decadence by a diminishing of this percentage as follows:

	Per cent.
For the period ending 1886-87	19.5
For the period ending 1891-92	15.7
For the period ending 1896-97	11.6
For the period ending 1901-2	7.5
For the period ending 1906-7	5.8

And for the year 1907 only 4.5 per cent of the entire crop was sold and exported through that great market port.

In all fairness I ask if these figures do not conclusively show that New York as a cotton market is on the decline?

Mr. Chairman, on the 25th day of April, on page 1006, the New York Financial and Commercial Chronicle published editorially the following:

It has become so much the fashion of late to attack the New York Cotton Exchange that little or no care is used in making statements. For example, in an attempt to show that little spot business is done here, Mr. BURLINSON, in supporting his antioption bill before Congress, recently made the statement that receipts of cotton at New York have been gradually decreasing of late years until in 1906-7 they reached only 23,108. As a matter of fact the arrivals at this port in that year were 1,413,277, of which 493,000 were sent abroad and approximately 850,000 forwarded to spinners. Spot sales aggregated 118,265 and there were 459,600 actually delivered on future contracts. But the misstatement referred to is of a piece with those that have preceded it, and is evidently intended to keep alive the feeling of animosity toward the local body.

Mr. Chairman, it is claimed for this journal that it is the greatest financial paper published in America, if not in the world. Especial claims have always been put forward as to its accuracy and fairness. If these claims be well founded then undoubtedly this great journal has been woefully imposed upon. I am prepared to believe that this editorial was inspired by some member of the selfish and unscrupulous clique said to be in control of the New York Exchange, and whose members, because of their official positions, are the principal beneficiaries of the uncommercial practices which are carried on therein. The statements contained in this editorial are not only grossly misleading, but some of them are absolutely false. Everyone who heard me when I spoke on April 2, and everyone who has honored me by reading that speech, knows that I made no effort to arouse any animosity toward the members of this exchange, but, on the contrary, I declared my belief that they would abandon their uncommercial rules and regulations if it was possible for them to do so and continue to exist. If an honest, helpful cotton exchange could be maintained at New York no one would rejoice at its prosperity and maintenance more than I would, because it is to the interest of the producer to have as many markets for his cotton as possible.

But, Mr. Chairman, my contention is that New York has ceased to be a cotton market. I think I have shown that the stock of cotton carried in New York has for a number of years been gradually decreasing, until it has reached the point where many believe future trading on the exchange is actually endangered, because there is not sufficient reserves in New York upon which to do this business.

Now, am I mistaken about this? Let's see. It is a well-known fact that the board of managers of this cotton exchange have appointed a special committee to devise and elaborate a plan by which, if possible, stocks of cotton, carried at various points in the cotton section, can, by being stored in properly licensed warehouses and officially classified, inspected, and certificated, become a proper, recognized and legal delivery against a future contract made on the exchange.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this action by the exchange is a tacit admission of what I claim and what I think I have clearly established. The truth is, the New York Exchange members, recognizing the decadence of New York as a spot market, are trying to offset the fact by enlarging its available stocks by going to the South and there establishing certificated warehouses. This they may deny as vehemently and often as they please, but it is true. I fear that conditions are now such that the exchange can not in this way bring about a broadening or increasing of its stocks so as to conduct an honest, fair business. To continue under existing conditions is both unjust and dishonest. In the first place the character of cotton carried—the New York stocks—is, to use the language of a member of the board of managers of the exchange, Mr. Arthur R. Marsh, "Such as the spinners are not buying freely." It is unfair to the producer of cotton that this low-grade stuff be used for purposes of tender, thus hammering down prices; and it is dishonest to the consumer of cotton because the narrowness of the New York spot market is such that its transactions can not be honestly used as a basis for fixing contract differences. Because of this they are driven to an arbitrary fixing of these differences practically once a season, to stand, regardless of the change which may be brought about by supply and demand. Thus their contract is debauched and degraded.

Leon Say, the great French political economist, second if not equal to Adam Smith, taught that of all the evils and nightmares that could befall a nation, none compared to a debased circulating medium. The New York Cotton Exchange has debased and debauched its contract so that it has become a false, a spurious measure, complained of at different times from different sections, some understanding fully the causes of the trouble, most feeling it without comprehending the causes, the injustice finally culminating, as it has within recent times, in drastic legislation by almost all the cotton States, and an investigation by the National Government, just concluded. The only noncomplainant against the operations of the exchange are the European traders. They know a good thing when they see it, or, more properly, when they have it.

And the saddest part of the picture is that, as usual, it is the "small" man who bears the brunt; the planter, the storekeeper, or the trader of the interior, who does not understand the workings of this debased, uncommercial contract. The rich always benefit by such methods. A Rockefeller and a Rogers get their heads together; amalgamate a few copper properties—some good, some bad—multiply their real value by 20, 30, perhaps 40; tickle the public into biting, only to be bitten a little later. They are smart financiers—la haute finance. A Morgan, a Ryan, or a Harriman pick up some railroad; inject 50, 60, perhaps 70 per cent of water into its stocks and bonds, land it on the dear public, and grow richer. But how about the "common people?" How are their interests affected? Are they not at last the real victims? But to return to the criticisms of my former speech.

The Financial Chronicle editorial boasts of "the arrivals at this (New York) port" in the year 1906-7, as does also the New York Chronicle, claiming an increase.

How cute these defenders of the New York Exchange are in manipulating figures! Why of course the figures given for receipts for 1906-7 were larger than the average of the previous six years. Strange if they were not, for the crop of that year, 13,540,000 bales, was the next largest on record, compared with an average yield for the previous six years of a little above 11,000,000 bales. Again, in support of their contention that New York had not declined as a cotton market, the Financial Chronicle brings forward the astonishing statement that "there were 459,600 bales actually delivered there on future contract." They must think the people are easily bamboozled—they must think we are grossly ignorant of any knowledge or familiarity with the so-called business carried on in this exchange.

What do such figures amount to? Nothing, absolutely nothing! Each 100 bales may have been delivered once every month, which means twelve times during the season—in fact, it might have been delivered two, three, or four times each month. So such figures mean nothing, show nothing.

Mr. Chairman, twisted and distorted figures and false inferences can not change the fact that New York as a cotton market is decadent. I still insist that its net receipts are a fair measure of the standing of New York as a spot market. Her net receipts have steadily declined, and this fact correctly measures her position in the cotton trade—for while the gross receipts may be expected to show up larger and larger, progressively, owing to increased size of crop and increased consumption by Eastern mills whose stocks pass through there, the net receipts, which to a considerable extent used to go to New York for cotton brokers to "bank on" up to the year 1897, have become almost nil in recent years. There are two reasons for this: First, because it costs $1.50 "for every bale shipped to New York and carried in warehouses, which is not incurred if the same cotton is shipped direct from the South to the spinner;" and, second, because of the arbitrary, uncommercial manipulations of a few men in the New York Cotton Exchange. They serve their selfish interests first, at the cost of fairness of trade to all, and try to make us and the rest of the world believe that they believe themselves to be doing the right and just thing.

On April 2, I read from Latham Alexander's Cotton Fluctuations the net receipts of New York for only a few years. I now

"The committee shall on the day of meeting consider the report of the committee on spot quotations and the suggestions and opinions presented by members, whether in writing or verbally, and establish the differences in value of all grades, on or off, as related to middling cotton, which shall constitute the rates at which grades other than middling may be delivered upon contract."

Consider for a moment what this rule means. It is a deliberate attempt to nullify the operation of the law of supply and demand. It is an assumption of right on the part of this exchange to fix for a period of ten months the differences in value between the several grades of cotton.

There is a demand for low-grade cotton, as we know, and after differences have been fixed by this revision committee the commercial demand may materially diminish the difference in value between this cotton and cotton of the higher grades, and yet under this rule the difference fixed by this committee must stand for the full period of time. What a fruitful field for manipulation! After these differences have been fixed a storm may sweep over the entire cotton region—it frequently does—and higher grades of cotton as a result of commercial demand may advance materially over the market price of the low grades, and yet this exchange, day by day, solemnly announces that no change in differences can be made until the September to come. Regardless of how wide these differences may actually become because of the demands of the trade the New York exchange remains a law unto itself and maintains differences fixed months before. Because of this it is a safe selling market; but all wise buyers avoid it.

The question now arises from whence comes the buyer? I'll tell you, he is the nonprofessional speculator, the small trader, the unwary multitude found here, there, and everywhere in our country—especially in the South, where we are always optimistic about cotton—who, finding the New York exchange quotations below all others elsewhere, and not knowing the cause, and perhaps not understanding it if told, rushes in as buyer at New York, and in the end, of course, is left to hold the bag.

Yet the New York exchange pretends to be outraged when criticism is directed against such rules and practices, and insolently demands that it remain unmolested.

Mr. Chairman, it has been charged that the revision committee has purposely established differences far out of line with the commercial difference in value between the grades. I make no such charge. Enormous injury to the producer and consumer will inevitably come as a result of honest mistakes or poor judgment on their part, and this suffices as a reason for me to condemn this arbitrary rule without venturing into the field of speculation as to the infamies and wrongs which could be perpetrated if the men who made up this committee were corrupt enough to attempt to use their power for their own selfish purposes. A careful study of the situation discloses that three factors have contributed to the abnormal depression of the price of futures on the New York exchange below the level of spot prices in the South.

I charged then that the failure of the revision committee to fix differences commensurate with the real value of the several grades, as shown by quotations in the South and at Liverpool, contributed to the abnormal depression of the price of futures on the New York Exchange below the level of spot prices in the South.

Mr. Chairman, I now submit the letter of submittal by Commissioner Smith, the italics being mine:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, May 4, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith Part I of the report on the operations of cotton exchanges, made in accordance with House resolution No. 795, of February 4, 1907.

This part deals with cotton-exchange methods of determining differences in price between various grades of cotton in connection with future contracts. Subsequent parts will take up the matter of classification of cotton, the range of grades, and effects of exchange rules and other conditions upon the price.

"Future" transactions in cotton provide for delivery at a distant date instead of for immediate delivery, as in the case of so-called "spot" transactions.

There are two great cotton exchanges in this country, New York and New Orleans, where organized future dealings are conducted. All future trading on both these exchanges is in so-called "basis" contracts—that is, contracts which permit the delivery of a number of "grades" of cotton on one contract. The seller of this contract may deliver thereon any grade he chooses within the range prescribed by the exchange. The buyer has no option. The proper theory of a basis contract, however, is that all grades shall be deliverable at prices which will make them commercial equivalents of each other. Cotton is graded substantially on its color and on the amount of leaf and other foreign matter, all materially affecting its market value. At the time that this investigation started, thirty grades were deliverable on contracts of the New York Cotton Exchange, later reduced to eighteen grades, chiefly by cutting out intermediate grades, with little reduction in the extreme range. The range of grades deliverable at New Orleans is nominally about the same. "Middling" cotton is always the basis grade, the grade for which the price is fixed by the parties to the contract. The prices at which other grades are deliverable are determined by the so-called "differences" above and below—or, in trade parlance, "on" and "off"—middling.

There are two ways of establishing these differences. For the last eleven years the New York Cotton Exchange has had a so-called "fixed-difference" system. A committee of the exchange, commonly known as the revision committee, meets twice a year, in September and in November, and establishes the respective price differences on or off which shall apply to the grades other than middling. These differences, once established, can not be changed until the next regular meeting, and govern all contracts in futures.

The New Orleans Cotton Exchange, on the other hand, has what is known as the "commercial-difference" system. A committee of the exchange meets daily, and, upon information of actual "spot" transactions, quotes the prices of the various grades, which quotations virtually establish the differences which apply on future contracts. That is to say, the New York system arbitrarily fixes what the differences for all grades shall be for two months or for ten months, while New Orleans follows the actual market differences for these grades as established by daily spot transactions. This part compares these two methods.

The buyer of a future contract can not specify the grades to be delivered thereon. Obviously, therefore, he is greatly concerned as to the "differences" at which he may have to accept the various grades. He knows exactly the price for one grade—that is, middling cotton. That price was stipulated in his contract, the so-called basis price. But as to the prices which he must pay for other grades he is dependent upon the exchange differences. The underlying principle of a basis contract undoubtedly is that if the seller does not deliver middling cotton he shall substitute other grades only at their true value relative to that of middling in the spot market at the time of delivery—that is, at the actual commercial differences. This clearly is the only equitable basis. Under these conditions, as far as price is concerned, a basis future contract is substantially the equivalent of a contract for middling cotton. Consequently the market price of basis future contracts for immediate delivery should be practically the same as the price of middling cotton in the spot market. There is, however, properly a small regular margin between the two, because some expense is involved in sorting out and disposing of the mixed assortment of grades likely to be received on contract.

For all interests legitimately using the exchange, it is highly desirable that this margin should be comparatively constant in amount—that is, that there should be a substantial "parity" maintained between the spot price of middling cotton and the price of middling cotton on contracts for immediate delivery. A future contract is supposed to represent actual cotton, and from the very nature of things such a parity should be preserved. The respective merits of "fixed" and "commercial" differences are, therefore, roughly indicated by their effect on this parity. In general, it may be said that the commercial-difference system maintains this parity far better than the fixed-difference system. This is because the commercial-difference system is based on actual daily transactions in cotton, so that the same influences that affect the differences in spot transactions also affect the future contract differences and thus maintains the parity between the price of future contracts and the price of spot middling cotton. Under a proper application of the commercial-difference system the operator in future contracts can base his calculations on the course of middling cotton, and is able largely to disregard differences for other grades, since he relies on the exchange to keep these constantly correct.

Under the fixed-difference system, on the other hand, the operator, besides considering the probable course of the middling price, must also consider the course of the prices of all other grades. Fixed differences are an attempt to establish arbitrarily, and months in advance, the relative values of grades. These differences are bound to become at times erroneous, because the relations of values inevitably vary under the natural laws of supply and demand. Consequently, if the operator believes that the "fixed" differences are wrong, or may become wrong by the time the contract matures, he will, because he is bound by them, endeavor to offset this error by modifying the basis price which he offers for the contract; and this, as a matter of fact, constantly occurs during such variance. Further, inasmuch as the seller has the option of delivering any one or all the grades, he will, of course, deliver those grades which are most overvalued by the existing differences, so that the basis future price will be affected, not by the average error in the differences, but by the maximum error therein. The result is that the price of future contracts, thus affected by the fixed differences, will at times vary widely from the actual price of middling cotton in spot transactions. The extent of these variations will depend chiefly upon the extent of the errors in differences. In other words, these errors will disturb the normal parity above described. These disturbances have a very far-reaching effect, especially on the distribution of speculative risks.

Dealings in cotton must always be accompanied by risk, either to the producer, the merchant middleman, the speculator, or the spinner. Natural conditions greatly affect the supply, and other conditions the demand, and both consequently affect the price. What is the equitable distribution of these risks? It is a general principle that much of the risk should properly be borne by the speculative class; that is, by those who neither produce nor spin cotton, but who are interested simply in making a profit out of the rise or fall of its price. Whatever justification there may be for the speculator lies in the fact that he stands ready to take a large share of this risk. His function is to forecast future natural conditions affecting supply and demand, to obtain as accurate information thereon as possible, to make the price for future deliveries based on such information, and thus to discount in advance, as far as possible, for the benefit of the trade in general, the effect of such future conditions and thereby keep prices free from violent fluctuations which otherwise would occur from unforeseen natural causes.

One especial and necessary function of the speculator in assuming risk is to facilitate so-called "hedging" operations. The manufacturer of cotton, for instance, usually makes many months in advance his contract to deliver cloth to the dealer. His price for that cloth must be based largely on what he has to pay for raw cotton. This he can not foretell. Suppose he has agreed to deliver cloth which will consume a thousand bales of cotton, and at a price which will be profitable if he can buy that cotton at 10 cents a pound. Immediately upon making that agreement he buys a thousand bales on future contract. This contract should insure him against loss by fluctuation in the price of raw cotton. For instance, if when he buys his actual cotton for spinning the price of middling cotton has advanced to 12 cents, he loses that much from his profit on the cloth. On the other hand, if the price of future contracts has made a corresponding advance of 2 cents, thus maintaining a proper parity between the future price and the spot price, he makes 2 cents on his future contract. His loss on actual cotton is thus offset by his gain on the futures. His hedging operation, therefore, far from being speculative, eliminates the speculative element from his business. The manufacturer assumes sufficient risk in the risk of manufacture and distribution.

Similarly other interests, and particularly cotton merchants, thus try to hedge against speculative risks.

Now, the value of hedging depends entirely upon the maintenance of this parity between the spot price of middling cotton and the price of future contracts. Should this parity be disturbed after the contract is made, some class of these hedging interests will lose. In the case above cited, should the price of raw cotton go up 2 cents before the maturity of the contract, while the price of future contracts went up only 1 cent, the manufacturer would lose 2 cents a pound on his spot-cotton purchases, and gain only 1 cent on his futures, a net loss of 1 cent a pound.

It is, of course, possible that the parity might so vary that the hedge would give a net profit instead of a loss. But such profit is a speculative one, and is in conflict with the fundamental theory of hedging, which is intended to eliminate the speculative factor. The man who hedgers does so to remove himself from the speculative class. If he secures protection against speculative losses he has no right to speculative profits.

Fixed differences are an attempt substantially to render future transactions a "sure thing" for a limited class of speculative experts. The system amounts to an attempt absolutely to fix prices—an economic absurdity. The relative values of different grades are as much subject to the natural laws of supply and demand as the value of middling cotton itself, and it is as unreasonable to attempt to fix one by the fiat of a committee as it is the other.

The result of this attempt, as above shown, is to affect the basis price that is paid for future contracts. The law of supply and demand, unable to work directly on these fixed differences, works itself out indirectly on the basis price of the contract; but this indirect action results in great loss to a vast body of persons who are not experts and who do not understand this artificial machinery or its results. By compelling operators in futures to consider probable conflicts between the two acts of differences, as well as possible variations in the price of middling cotton itself, an unnecessary increase in trading risks is introduced. This is clearly an evil. The system results in shifting the burden of risk from a limited class of experts to a non-speculative class, or to those ignorant of the working of the system. A premium is thus put on intelligence applied to artificial conditions, which of course is of no service to the public, rather than on intelligence applied solely to forecasting the actual conditions of supply and demand. In the same way the system tends to shift the burden of risk from sellers upon buyers. Clearly a great advantage is given the seller from the fact that he can offer on contract any grade he chooses. He should not have both this privilege and the privilege of arbitrarily fixed differences, which almost invariably overvalue certain grades. The result of the combination of the two is to give the seller an extremely unfair advantage over the buyer.

The foregoing criticisms were strikingly illustrated in November, 1906, as the result of the failure of the New York revision committee to establish correct differences. Owing to abnormal weather conditions the commercial values of the lower grades of cotton fell very sharply from the price of middling. The revision committee failed to adjust its "fixed" differences to the actual situation and established differences for low grades which very heavily overvalued them. As a result the future contract price at New York dropped abruptly from the price of spot middling to the tremendous loss of a vast number of holders of future contracts for cotton and the profit of the few experts who understood and anticipated the effect of the system. Hundreds of men also, who had hedged cotton by buying contracts in New York, were injured by this striking disturbance in the parity. A number of failures in the South were charged to this one cause alone. One result has been to reduce hedging in New York, as the possibilities of its artificial system were thus disclosed.

As pointed out above, such a disastrous disturbance in the parity is exactly what is brought about by the errors in the fixed differences in New York.

The reply of certain interests in the New York Exchange is that "a contract is a contract;" that men who deal there come of their own will and are supposed to understand the game. This position can not commend itself as sound business ethics. Practically, also, it is not true that cotton interests are wholly at liberty to stay out of the exchange. As shown above, certain interests must have a hedging place. Furthermore, financial connections with New York are so close that New York must be that place for many of them. Still further, the New York Cotton Exchange practically owes its existence to the volume of business made possible by the participation of outside interests. Both the duty of a private business man to his customers and the duty of a concern which is to a certain extent a public utility demand fair dealing.

The injury from such errors in differences as are inevitable under the fixed-difference system is not, however, the limit of possible harm under that system. There is danger that improper differences may be intentionally established.

As stated above, differences are fixed in New York by the revision committee but twice a year. The New York Exchange does not, as does New Orleans, provide any standard by which the committee shall act. It is not obliged to follow the spot-market quotations, or even any general principle. This leaves it an extreme degree of arbitrary power. This committee is usually made up of men who are large operators on the exchange, and who are constantly interested in the future market. It is within their power so to fix these differences as to affect enormously the value of their own future contracts. In this same revision of November, 1906, when the differences fixed by the committee were radically wrong, several members of this committee have admitted that they were at the time heavily interested in future contracts, and that they profited by the action of the committee. There is no conclusive proof that they intended this. It is sufficient to point out that this fixed-difference system, applied thus arbitrarily by a small body of men, furnished in this case a condition where (1) these men had the power thus to reap enormous profits at the expense of others; (2) they admit that they did reap profits; and (3) the motive for doing so was extremely strong. Comment upon this situation is hardly necessary.

The foregoing does not mean that the New Orleans "commercial-difference" system in its actual working has been at all times free from criticism. Disturbances of the parity have also occurred there, but have been by no means as great or as long continued as in New York. The trouble is not in the New Orleans system itself, but in occasional careless or improper application of it—an erroneous quotation of actual prices. There is, however, need of more care in the conduct of the system.

Since the beginning of this investigation there has been, both at New York and New Orleans, a considerable increase of discussion of the rules affecting future contracts and the possibility of improvement.

There is at present a fundamental difference in conditions between the New York and the New Orleans market, which doubtless is one reason for the difference in system, though by no means an excuse therefor. Under modern conditions of transportation, with the through bill of lading available, New York is no longer a natural spot-cotton market. Cotton usually takes the cheapest route to the mills, and this route does not include a stop-over at New York. As a result transactions in spot cotton in New York are quite small, and thus there is not in New York such a market in actual cotton as will furnish reliable quotations to be used in fixing contract differences.

This, however, does not prevent the application of the commercial-difference principle in substance to future contracts in New York. The commercial differences existing in the leading Southern spot markets can be used as a basis for contract differences. It would not be strictly necessary to revise the contract differences as often as changes in such commercial differences occur. If the contract differences were revised weekly, or even monthly, the substantial advantages of the commercial-difference system could be secured.

It is contended by many that such a return to the commercial-difference system would, because of the disadvantages of New York's location, destroy the business of the New York Cotton Exchange. There is little reason to believe that any such result would occur. However this may be, the New York Cotton Exchange, if it can not exist under a just and equitable system, has no excuse for existence at all. The present New York system of fixed differences is uneconomic, in defiance of natural law, unfair, and, like all other attempts to defy natural law, results in such complex and devious effects that the benefit of its transactions accrues only to a skilled few.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT KNOX SMITH,
Commissioner of Corporations.

The President.

Mr. Chairman, so it seems I am not alone in my belief that the rules and practices of this exchange are indefensible. I again assert that this Bureau report sustains me on every proposition I made in so far as this part of the report attempts to treat the question discussed by me. And, Mr. Chairman, there are others who are of the opinion that the by-laws of the exchange providing for fixed differences in value between grades of cotton practically once a year should be changed. Permit me to read from the semi-official organ of the exchange.

I read from the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of date January 25, 1907:

COTTON EXCHANGE TO HAVE NO ADDITIONAL REVISION—BUT VOTES TO CUT OFF LOW GRADES FROM ITS CONTRACT—QUARTER GRADES ALSO ABOLISHED—ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT BALLOTS TAKEN BY THE EXCHANGE—SPOT AND WALL STREET HOUSES OPPOSE FEBRUARY REVISION—CONTRACT EXPLAINED.

The New York Cotton Exchange yesterday adopted by ballot the amendment proposed by the managers to its by-laws, which makes strict low middling stained the lowest grade of cotton deliverable under exchange contracts. The change will take effect in January, 1908. An amendment was also adopted eliminating all the quarter grades.

The proposed amendment changing the dates of meetings of the revision committee from the second Wednesday in September and the third Wednesday in November to the third Wednesday in September, November, and February was not carried, considerable opposition having developed to this feature by Wall street and spot houses, as shown by the following circular, which all members found in their mails yesterday morning:

"We, the undersigned, are of the opinion, after giving the subject consideration, that it would not be advisable to have another revision of differences between grades of cotton commencing February, 1908, as it would have an unsettling effect on the market by restricting transactions during December and January. Operators would do very little during that period, pending the uncertainty of February revision, particularly Europeans, who at times do a large business. The importers and jobbers in coffee have no fear of further revision, as the coffee exchange abolished the rule for fixing differences after it adopted the present differences between grades.

"A vote by ballot will be taken at our exchange to-morrow, Wednesday, January 23, between 11 a. m. and 2 p. m.

"We hope you will be present. If you can not, a proxy can be used, which will be furnished by Henry Hentz & Co. or some of the signers of this.

"Henry Hentz & Co.; Stephen M. Weld & Co.; Fernie Wilson & Co.; T. M. Robinson & Co.; Wm. Ray & Co.; Hopkins, Dwight & Co.; Shearson, Hammill & Co.; Henry Clews & Co.; F. B. Guest & Co.; W. R. Craig & Co.; C. E. Rich & Co.; Latham, Alexander & Co.; Siegf. Gruner & Co."

The vote on the first two amendments was overwhelmingly in favor, but the figures on the revision amendment were 163 in favor and 123 against, it being lost because it failed to receive a two-thirds vote in favor.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know it, but I suspect that among these signers are the chief beneficiaries of the present system, or, as it should be called, "the sure thing." I doubt not among them could be found the chiefs of the small coterie who profited by that historic revision of November, 1906, referred to by Commissioner Smith in his report. And I am confident I would not be far amiss if I also said that among these names could be found the firm which led the December squeeze of 1907, to which I will direct your attention in a moment.

So it seems, Mr. Chairman, a majority of the members of the exchange voting expressed themselves in favor of a change of this indefensible system of fixing differences, but no change was made, for the reason stated. This article, clipped from the Bulletin, concludes with a defense of the exchange contract by Mr. Henry Hentz, who ends his defense with this significant statement:

A few years ago there were loud complaints that grades delivered on contract were too good at the exchange-fixed differences.

Europeans who understand the cotton business think our system of delivery is very superior.

These exchange people seem to be quite solicitous about the welfare of the European trader, but not one word about the Southern producer or the American consumer. The European trade must be protected, even if unjust, uncommercial, uneconomical, and illogical rules and regulations must be continued. These rules inure to the benefit of a few, very few concerns, but they are a detriment to thousands, yes, millions, who are helpless to protect themselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct attention to one of the most unique communications it has ever been my fortune to encounter. It is an appeal addressed by Mr. Atwood Violet to the members of the exchange, and, in effect, begs them to be good just for a little while. I clipped it from the May 2 issue of the New York Journal of Commerce. Read it and marvel at the open, brazen discussion of such wrongs and outrages as are tacitly confessed therein.

COTTON TRADE INTEREST IN THE SMITH REPORT—FEARS THAT IT WILL CRITICISE EXCHANGE METHODS—ATWOOD VIOLETT SUGGESTS CAUTION AT THE PRESENT TIME IN BRINGING ABOUT ABNORMAL CONDITIONS BETWEEN NOW AND JULY 1, SUCH AS AN EXCESSIVE JULY PREMIUM WOULD CREATE.

Much interest is being taken in cotton trade circles in the report of Commissioner Smith on his investigation into cotton-exchange methods. In a circular addressed to members of the New York Exchange Atwood Violet yesterday urged caution in deals that might attract criticism at this particular time, saying in part:

"The impression is that the Department of Commerce and Labor has information as to manipulation of this market that took place last autumn, when December contracts were advanced $4 per bale, or 80 points over January, and this premium maintained until the very last day of December, thus bringing about a squeeze, or practically a corner, in the latter month, and movements of which character have done so much in the past two years to bring forth criticisms that have been so generously extended to this exchange, as unfortunately we all have reason to know.

"In order to refresh the memories of those who may have forgotten, will say that notices were issued on the 28th or 29th of December last for delivery on the 2d of January, notwithstanding the discount under January referred to above. In other words, had those who delivered on January delivered the same cotton on December 31, they would have received, according to the premium over January, it will be seen, a premium of $4 per bale in excess of the basis on which they issued their tenders on the 28th or 29th of December for delivery three or four days later.

"It was said, however, that many of those issuing notices on January were those responsible for maintaining the December premium and thus by holding the long interest in that month they made the unfortunate short 'step up and settle,' where cotton was not forthcoming in order to liquidate December short contracts.

"Should it be found, when the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor is made public, that these manipulative features or squeezes have been gone into very thoroughly by them, in which event they would doubtless recommend very stringent measures to prevent such tactics in the future, in what a predicament the New York Cotton Exchange would be if it should be seen within the next thirty days or so that those responsible for the December movement of 1907 (or any others of our membership) were attempting in the same way to establish a greater premium on July over October than now exists.

"Such a situation would be entirely artificial, because of the absence of a premium on a subsequent month sufficient to pay all or part of the costs of 10 points, or 50 cents per bale per month. Therefore, to bring about abnormal conditions between now and July 1, such as an excessive July premium would create, would certainly bring the New York Cotton Exchange into a great deal of unfavorable prominence, which, pending the publication of the report referred to, should certainly be avoided. While the exchange itself would be criticised, so far as general sentiment is concerned, the responsibility would lie with those who might attempt a July manipulation. Therefore, if any such idea is in the minds of one or more members of our exchange they should carefully consider, individually and collectively, the position they would be placed in, with a possible investigation thereafter, through Congressional action. In that case, it might be that Congress would simultaneously take up the December situation as well, but we can hardly imagine in view of the possibilities referred to that a July movement of the character we have outlined will materialize.

"To avoid further burdening our exchange in the way of adverse legislation, State and national, is something that must appeal to all, and, therefore, it would seem to be well to take under consideration by the members generally the suggestions we herein offer, so that discussion of the same may be had."

Mr. Chairman, permit me to make a liberal translation of what is meant by this appeal to the members of the exchange. I want to be fair, and yet I feel that I am just when I say that this article may be summed up in a few words. In effect it says:

Please, fellows, don't do any robbing while the policeman is looking! Don't do it, for if you do, some step might be taken to break up our sure-thing game.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, these people express surprise, or pretend it, when the producers and consumers of cotton insist that such practices of exploitation and plunder be abandoned.

Now, permit me to read again from the semi-official organ of the New York Exchange. I read from Cotton Causeurle in the issue of May 8 of this year:

The people who believe in reforming the New York contract have the votes," said one prominent member, "but the old machine has the organization. There has been a great awakening among the members, but at the same time the people with business to give out to other members usually get what they want, and the machine may win again, although it is to be remembered that the last annual election was not a victory for the revision of November, 1906.

So it seems that this great (?) exchange is in the grasp of a clique or ring, and that it can not cleanse itself, though a majority of its members, seeing the danger menacing it, desire to adopt wholesome measures of reform. It seems also that the "machine" responsible for the malodorous revision of November, 1906, referred to in Commissioner Knox Smith's report, is not only in control now, but will continue to dominate the exchange.

But permit me to read again:

There is a clever, fast game being played between big people just now, and the little fellow on the outside seems to be inclined to look on.

This would indicate that the fellows are not going to give heed to the importunities of Mr. Atwood Violet, but intend to play the game even if the policeman (the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations) is looking on.

I read again from the same paper:

The old crowd says: "Did you ever see an outsider get away with the money?"

There you have it, Mr. Chairman, in all its baldness, and this from the organ of the exchange. Could one take a better text for an advocacy of the legislation which I propose than the paragraph which I have just read?

The old crowd says: "Did you ever see an outsider get away with the money?"

This aptly expresses and exemplifies the attitude and policy of the "ring" at present in control of the New York Cotton Exchange. They attempt so to direct its legislation and its methods that the public will be induced to operate there, and then skillfully separate it from its money. If an outsider engages in the game with them, and it becomes necessary to engage in litigation with them to make them accountable to the law of the land, they promptly respond that "they have no obligations to anyone not a member of the exchange." This was their defense in the suit brought by a former member of the New York Exchange against the cotton exchange last year, and, as I now recollect, a New York court held there was no privity of contract between an outsider and the exchange, and its rules could not be interfered with by any other than members of the exchange.

View the situation as it is to-day. Throughout the South the producer is holding on to about a million bales of spot cotton for an advance in price, an advance in price which would readily be paid and could readily be afforded by the spinning interests of this country.

Incidentally and supplementing this effort on the part of the South to realize a price for their cotton that is fully justified, speculators on the New York Cotton Exchange, who are described in the paragraph which I have read as "outsiders," have bought a considerable quantity of July contracts. A reading of this paper in the last few weeks shows that arrayed against them are practically all the influential members of the New York Cotton Exchange, who have apparently made an agreement to simply smother the bull movement by selling more July contracts than the other side can possibly buy.

An examination of the daily bulletin issued by the exchange shows that in New York to-day there are only about 68,000 bales of cotton deliverable on contract. Speculators identified with the cotton-exchange "ring" have probably sold for July delivery three or four times this quantity of cotton. Now, what will the ring do if the advance shall go further? They will call for original margins, and in this way break the credit of those who are buying cotton and force a decline. What will be the result? New York future quotations exert a marked influence upon the value of spot cotton in the South. If successful in this effort to force a decline, these manipulators in fact will depreciate the value of the million bales of cotton remaining in the South, and, further, they will as well sympathetically depreciate the value of cotton goods, check the demand for the product of the mills, and force, if possible, a condition of prostration in the cotton-manufacturing business more complete than that which now exists, and all this simply that they may "take an outsider's money away from him." If this be commerce, then it is a new evolution of it, and if it be not commerce, but simply speculative chicanery and robbery, then I again assert it ought to be suppressed.

I now direct attention to a clipping from the Financial Chronicle, published during the first week of this month, urging that something be promptly done to comply with the recommendations made by Commissioner Smith and asserting that no valid reason can be given why such action should not be taken—in fact, that it should be done in order to silence complaint with the exchange itself. I read it:

[Financial Chronicle.]

COTTON-EXCHANGE "DIFFERENCES"—A TRADE EXPERT ON COMMISSIONER SMITH'S REPORT ON REVISION OF GRADES.

Mr. Smith suggests that a radical change in the present system should be made by providing for revision at least once a month, using the average official quotations of several representative Southern markets as a basis, making allowance, of course, for the relative importance of the markets (as well as for discrepancies in standards of classification).

We note a disposition on the part of prominent interests connected with the New York exchange to take strong exception to the commissioner's findings and recommendations on this point, but we are unable to discern any valid reason why some change should not be made. The impossibility of arriving at any correct basis in November on which grades other than middling shall be delivered during the remainder of the season must be admitted. Weather conditions play an important part in determining grade, and all danger of storm damage, etc., has not passed by November 10. It would seem that something should be done and that promptly to meet the Commissioner's recommendations and silence complaint from within the exchange itself. There is a disposition in some quarters to construe as a veiled threat the commissioner's concluding remark that "if the New York Cotton Exchange can not exist under such rules as are equitable and commercial, then it has no right to exist at all." We are more inclined to look upon it as a remark used to point out the extreme importance of the matter.

I now make the prediction that any such effort will fail, just as it did in January, 1907. Those who believe in reforming the exchange may have the votes, but the old machine has the organization. Nothing will be done.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the value to the cotton trade of exchanges which perform the legitimate and proper functions of an exchange, but I have no compromise to make, no concessions to give to an institution calling itself an exchange which by uncommercial rules and regulations has been perverted into a sure-thing gambling den. Such, I regret to say, the New York Cotton Exchange has become. It is too bad that an institution designed for and originally intended to serve the cotton trade should have been so abused by fictitious dealings and so perverted as to make it simply a gamble on the rise or fall in the price of cotton. The cotton crop is bought and sold a hundred times during a given year, a speculative feature which cancels the effect of supply and demand in fixing the price of this great common necessity. Is trading in futures essential to the welfare of the cotton trade? I do not believe it is. Bearing on this point I will read from a speech delivered before the April (1908) convention of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers by Hon. J. R. McColl, former president of the association:

Why should it be so, if the wool crop of the world, amounting in value to $500,000,000 annually, as well as the silk and linen crops, are marketed successfully without trading in futures? This system does not influence or move the crop, and it certainly affords great opportunity for speculation, which is injurious to legitimate industry. The speculator claims to "foresee" coming conditions. Unfortunately this is not his chief business. It is to create temporary artificial conditions by selling quantities of cotton that he does not own, or buying cotton that he does not intend to accept delivery of. In the long run it must, of course, be admitted that supply and demand regulate price, but in the intermediate artificial fluctuations the speculator makes his money and the grower and manufacturer are apt to suffer disaster.

Mr. Chairman, why should this great American product—because cotton is essentially a product of our country; we produce now and will for decades to come fully 70 per cent of all grown—in producing which 5,000,000 of our people are engaged, be made a football for gamblers? Few people realize what this great crop, from an economical standpoint, means, not to the South, but to the commerce of all America. I submit a table showing the value of this American product as compared with the world's production of the two most valuable of the precious metals.

The American cotton crop is the one crop which every year brings millions of dollars from abroad to replenish our supply of gold. Whenever the price ranges above 9 cents a pound at least $600,000,000 of new national wealth will be created in every year when the present growth of acreage is maintained. With wheat and iron, cotton constitutes the trinity of universal staples. Its produce and sale affect the negro cabin in Mississippi, the mill in Kensington, and the Japanese girl who needs a new kimono alike. The Texas cotton bale is the chief foundation for the present-day wealth of both old England and New England.

This I clip from an editorial recently appearing in the North American, one of the ablest edited papers in this country. Speaking of the report made by Commissioner Smith and the effect of the transactions of the New York Cotton Exchange on the cotton trade, it says:

Yet the price of this great national product is fixed by a handful of speculators in a city that handles many times as many million bales of fictitious cotton as the whole world produces of the real, but which every year receives proportionately less and less of the actual product. Every development of transportation such as the "through bill of lading," every growth of an Atlantic port, every establishment of a new steamship line, means economic progress that narrows New York's receipts of actual cotton.

But New York continues to buy and sell millions upon millions of things called cotton bales, but in reality chalk marks and gamblers' checks, at quotations that fix the year's profits or losses for the cotton-picker and the manufacturer alike.

The Commissioner of Corporations gives some valuable information. Best of all is a comparison that shows the right and the wrong conduct of an exchange. New York and New Orleans are both speculative markets. But New Orleans also is a real market. The comparison is instructive.

The worth of cotton depends upon its color, its cleanliness, and the quality of its fiber—in the trade parlance, its "staple" and its "grade." There are eighteen grades recognized in the various markets, ranking up and down from "middling," a term applied to "white" cotton fit not for the finest, but for ordinary manufacturing purposes.

The differences in actual value between the grades above and below "middling" are fixed daily by the New Orleans exchange according to the commercial demand. The committee there meets daily. In New York the committee meets twice a year and fixes ratios not governed by crop conditions, but solely to enable cliques of gamblers to manipulate their game so as to mulct producers in the fall and mills in later months.

The conclusion of the Government report is that—

"The present New York system of fixed differences is uneconomic, in defiance of natural law, unfair, and, like all other attempts to defy natural law, results in such complex and devious effects that the benefit of its transactions accrues only to a skilled few."

But what the Government report does not set forth plainly is that the New Orleans future contract provides that the holder can call for a delivery of cotton of quality that manufacturers will buy, whereas the New York "tenderable" cotton is mainly of the kind that may be used to stuff mattresses, but can not be spun into cotton goods.

In other words, the New Orleans exchange is a commercial one, which justifies its existence, whereas the New York exchange is one in which the actual product is merely a symbol for gambling transactions. Yet the spinners of America, England, and continental Europe base their bids for their raw material upon the fictitious New York future boards.

What the Government investigator should have made plain, but did not, is the fact about what should be called the "check-rack" of New York's cotton gambling house. This is a mass of baled and warehoused stuff, unfit for any manufacturer's use, but "tenderable" under any New York contract.

In other words, on a recent date, when the stock of New York cotton was 84,784 bales, exactly 81,477 bales were of such quality as to be worthless, except for the use of gambling coteries to use in raising or depressing the price at will.

Mr. Chairman, few people realize the influence exerted upon the price of spot cotton by the manipulations practiced on the New York exchange. The States of the cotton section have within the past few years become aroused to the magnitude of the injury being done to the cotton trade, and have by legislation attempted as far as they could to protect the cotton trade, the producer and spinner, from the great hurt that is being done them. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that even we in the South fully realize the extent to which these evil practices have gone.

In this connection notice which within the last few days appeared in the public press relative to the failure of the firm of T. A. McIntyre & Co., of New York City, is interesting and instructive. According to the newspaper account this firm had the reputation of doing one of the largest businesses in cotton futures of any house on Wall street. Mr. Moler, office manager, in an interview following the suspension, said that the firm suffered greatly from the effect of the anti-option laws of the Southern States. Before these laws went into effect Mr. Moler said the firm's monthly trading in cotton options aggregated 800,000 bales, but recently their monthly business has not exceeded 50,000 bales. According to this statement the yearly cotton business of this one firm represented more than 9,600,000 bales, an amount equal to 85 per cent of the entire quantity grown in this country in 1907 and 100,000 bales more than the crop of eight years ago.

And, bearing on the same subject, I desire to direct attention to a statement by the general attorney for the Western Union Telegraph Company, made in a hearing before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which he said that there were 74,805,000 telegrams transmitted annually, and that "60 per cent of the telegraph business of the country was transmission of information for exchanges, boards of trade, and commercial bodies."

Because of the legislation in the South against this outrageous gambling in the principal product of her people, there has doubtless been and will continue to be quite a falling off of the tolls which those engaged in the traffic have been gathering for the unwary ones of that section. Of course those injuriously affected by this legislation will resent it and do all that can be done to escape the consequences thereof. Some will fail, as McIntyre did. Others will endeavor to bring about a repeal of these laws and all kinds of specious arguments will be made, all kinds of means adopted to bring about that end. I will again read from the organ of the exchange a line showing the means to be resorted to. It says:

The cotton exchange has decided not to allow its members to send and post quotations in States where trading in futures is not permitted.

This, Mr. Chairman, is intended as a punishment to the Southern people for the effort they are making to protect themselves. It will not succeed. The laws the Southern States have passed to prevent gambling in cotton are on the statute books to stay. Instead of repealing them they will be elaborated and strengthened. The South is determined that no longer will she permit her people to be victimized and despoiled as they have been by these unconscionable gamblers.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I desire again to clearly define my position with reference to the cotton exchanges—the one at New York and also the one at New Orleans. I am unalterably opposed to every feature of their business which involves a gamble on the price of this great product. As I have repeatedly said, I doubt whether future trading of any kind for any purpose is ultimately to the interest of the producer, the farmer who grows cotton, or to the consumer, the manufacturer who spins cotton.

I have no sympathy with indiscriminate clamor blindly voiced for the destruction or hampering of legitimate speculation in cotton, but I do insist that such transactions should be based on actual cotton, and must not be mere frenzied gambling on the fluctuation in the price of phantom cotton, inevitably resulting to the serious hurt of millions of people who are unable to protect themselves from the injurious effects thereof. Again I say if the geographical handicap under which New York labors will not prevent her having again an important spot market (but I hear it will) I hope the New York Cotton Exchange may speedily change its uncommercial and uneconomical rules, abandon its unjust and unfair contract which makes to the great advantage of the seller, and once more render substantial aid to the cotton trade. Otherwise, as I said on April 2, if it is impossible for the New York Cotton Exchange to operate its so-called "business" without injury to the legitimate cotton trade then it should go out of business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to occupy five minutes on a matter not germane to the bill. During this session there have been several speeches delivered in the House upon various phases of the cotton question. Some of them have been in severe denunciation of the New York Cotton Exchange and of gentlemen who transact business thereon and of the methods of their procedure. It had been my intention before the expiration of this Congress to have taken the time to have replied to the speeches made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

A careful examination of these speeches, Mr. Chairman, discloses that none of these gentlemen have advanced any arguments different from those advanced more than sixteen years ago when the so-called "Hatch antioption bill" was under consideration. Indeed, without reflecting upon the gentlemen, it seems to me that a careful study of the debates of sixteen years ago on the question of the antioption bill would have made possible an even more formidable opposition to the exchange than has been presented at this time.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that the principal objection urged by me against the practice of the New York Cotton Exchange was directed against the rule admitting fixed differences between grades, and that rule has been adopted since the speech made by Mr. Hatch and Senator George?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Texas contends that his chief objection to the practice now in vogue on the New York Cotton Exchange is to the rule whereby what is known as "fixed differences" are made by members of the exchange. It is a well-known rule that lawyers—and the gentleman from Texas is a lawyer—

Mr. BURLESON. And a farmer.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Make their strongest points first in any argument that they advance. In a pamphlet copy of the speech made by the gentleman from Texas on the question he first makes this objection on page 39, in a speech of forty-six pages. I submit that the gentleman did not appreciate that this rule was the most vital objection that could be made to the exchange until a report, made by the Commissioner of Corporations, after the speech delivered by the gentleman from Texas was published condemning the practice regulated by the rule to which the gentleman from Texas referred.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman from New York submit one minute? I will read the beginning of my declaration upon that subject:

I now submit for your consideration a rule of the exchange which, in my opinion, operates to do the purchaser and consumer more damage, more serious hurt, than all other things combined.

I read it from their bills, and then I read the rule authorizing fixed differences. My declaration then states what I thought of the fixed differences.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What page is that?

Mr. BURLESON. Page 37.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that if the gentleman believes that that is the most vital objection, he would not have delivered thirty-seven pages of his speech upon other matters before he reached this objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, that is merely preliminary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Aside from that, for instance, the gentleman called attention to the fact that October futures on the day he delivered the speech were selling at 9½ cents and spot cotton was selling at 11 cents. Of course, in view of the statement of the commissioner of agriculture of Texas about that time that there would be 1,000,000 bales of cotton in October in excess of the demand for cotton, it is easy to realize why, with a surplus lot of cotton available or likely to be available, October futures would sell for less than spots would command at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I merely desired to say that since the speeches mentioned by me have been delivered, and which I believe I am able to answer, even to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], the Commissioner of Corporations has submitted what is known as part 1 of a report in response to a resolution adopted by the House on the 4th of February, 1907. This report deals with cotton-exchange methods of determining differences in price between various grades of cotton in connection with future contracts. The Commissioner of Corporations condemns what is known as the fixed-difference system and commends what is known as the commercial-difference system. It would be easy to discuss and to give legitimate commercial reasons for the adoption of the fixed-difference system.

It might suffice to say for the present that it is the only system known in the coffee trade and the only system known in the grain trade. The report states further, however, that the Commissioner of Corporations will submit subsequent reports which will take up the classification of cotton, the range of grades, and the effect of the exchange rules and other conditions upon the price. Since the Commissioner of Corporations intends to submit three supplements to the report already published, all affecting the same question, it seems to me more appropriate to defer the discussion of the speeches already made and the partial report of the Commissioner until the next session of Congress, when the Commissioner of Corporations will have completed his report.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, I think the gentleman had better take the full recess in order to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, we can discuss this question. My friend from Texas says it is advisable to take the complete recess in order to consider this. Mr. Chairman, there were two speeches published in the RECORD fifteen years ago. If I merely reprinted them in the RECORD at this time, even the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] would regret having made the speeches that he has made upon this question, because every argument that he has advanced either as novel or as old brushed up as new are completely refuted in the speeches of which I speak. The men engaged in business on the cotton exchange in New York are engaged in a legitimate business. They are entitled to the presumption that their business is legitimate. Proof of impropriety is necessary; illegality will not be presumed. These men enable my friends from the South—the men represented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]—to market their cotton at a profit. If the exchange were abolished or if it were impossible for those whom he represents to take advantage of the exchange, there is no doubt that his people would suffer much more than anyone else. I did not wish this session to end without giving notice that at an appropriate time when the investigation now being made is complete, when all of the evidence is before the Congress, those who are interested from another standpoint in this question will be perfectly ready and willing to debate every phase of it.

I have here a summary of a report by the Commissioner of Corporations; the complete report is not available to Members. It so happens that this report condemns one of the things that the gentleman from Texas discussed as an afterthought in his speech. He now proclaims that the Commissioner of Corporations has adopted his views. I know that the gentleman from Texas desires to discuss this question fairly and fully. It is apparent that neither he nor anybody else is justified in drawing conclusions from the report and testimony submitted to Congress by the Commissioner of Corporations, since the complete report and the evidence upon which it is made is not available for analysis. I hope my friend from Texas will contain his soul in patience. When there is ample time those who differ with him on this question will be willing to take all the time necessary to thoroughly and fully debate it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to the post exchange, Fort Moultrie, S. C., of an amount pertaining thereto, which was erroneously deposited in the Treasury to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts," $40.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

Insert as a separate paragraph, after page 26, line 25:

"To provide for the payment by the Secretary of War of the sum of $125 per month to Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, major and surgeon, United States Army, and the like sum per month to Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Isaac Lazear, late acting assistant contract surgeon, United States Army, as provided by law, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For ordnance and ordnance stores, Bureau of Ordnance, 1905, $76.78.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss a matter of much moment to the people of this country. I am now, always have been, and always expect to be, a friend of the American Navy, of its growth, of its success, of its welfare, and of its glory. I believe that this Government should have one of the best navies in all the world—not for offense, but for defense, not to provoke war, but for our protection, and as a guaranty of peace. A strong navy is national peace insurance. To-day, however, we are having much difficulty in getting the right kind of men to enlist in the Navy to man our magnificent ships. The quota is far from being filled. The personnel is not up to the standard of the ships. The Government needs now more men and better men, and the best way to get good men and better men in the Navy is to have a great merchant marine as a training school, and in case of war as an auxiliary navy. A navy without an auxiliary merchant marine is badly handicapped. This Government to-day has a poorer merchant marine than any third-class power in the world, and the reason for it is because we do not enact honest legislation to build up our merchant marine as it should be built up along constitutional lines and in accordance with well-settled deep-sea navigation principles. We have not as good a merchant marine to-day as we had one hundred years ago. We have not the tonnage on the high seas to-day that we had one hundred years ago, and the fault is all our own.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact, and a most deplorable fact, and every man who has investigated the subject knows it, that we have less registered tonnage for ocean-carrying trade to-day than we had one hundred years ago. In 1808 the United States, with a population of less than 3,000,000 inhabitants, owned more registered tonnage for ocean-carrying trade than the United States in 1908, with a population of nearly 90,000,000. The American tonnage in 1808 was over 900,000, and it is now less than 800,000, and, what is worse still, it showed an actual decrease of more than 6,000 tons last year. In 1808 American ships, flying the American flag and manned by American sailors, carried over 90 per cent of our deep-sea trade and a great part of that of all the countries of Europe. To-day we carry very little of our own trade and practically none of other countries, notwithstanding the fact that we should be the foremost maritime power in the world. More than nine-tenths of our once great and powerful deep-sea fleet has vanished, and not one new keel for an ocean-going ship is being laid to-day on either our Atlantic or Pacific coast, while the vessels of foreign nations through our ports and monopolize more than nine-tenths of all our import and export commerce.

In 1808 over 92 per cent of our export and import trade was carried in American bottoms; in 1908 less than 8 per cent of our imports and exports are carried in American ships. The United States pays to the owners of foreign deep-sea vessels for conveying our freights and passengers over $200,000,000 a year, and much of this vast sum of money goes to the owners of foreign steamers which are regularly enrolled on the merchant cruiser lists of European governments, manned by naval reserve officers and sailors, and available for immediate service against us in case of war.

It is a matter of much regret that the few Republicans in Congress who control and dictate legislation seek to remedy the situation by ship subsidies, and hence earnestly favor and eloquently advocate a ship-subsidy bill, which is no remedy at all, but a mere temporary makeshift to rob the many for the benefit of the few by taking money out of the pockets of the taxpayers generally and giving it to a few favored individuals. I am opposed to this subsidy policy. The taxpayers, when they understand it, will never consent to it. A subsidy bill at the very best is only a temporary expedient, and no one who understands this subject believes for a single moment that it will ever accomplish what its advocates so vociferously claim.

A subsidy is a bounty, a bonus, a gratuity, and it never has succeeded, and it never will succeed, in accomplishing the purpose desired. All history proves it conclusively. Wherever and whenever it has been tried it has failed. In my opinion, if a subsidy bill should pass it would not restore our American merchant marine or aid materially our shipbuilding industries. It is a waste of time to talk about ship subsidies, and I believe every honest American is absolutely opposed to them. We might just as well pass a bill to pay a subsidy to every man who grows a bushel of wheat, or a barrel of potatoes, or a bale of cotton, or who makes a wagon, or builds a locomotive, as to pay a subsidy to a man who builds a ship or sails a vessel.

The taxpayers of our country, burdened now almost beyond endurance, are opposed to ship subsidies. They are opposed to any gift bill. They say no private business interests should be aided by direct grants from the Treasury. Ship subsidies are subversive of the eternal principles of justice and equality, contrary to the theory of our free institutions, of doubtful expediency, and at war with the spirit of the Constitution. Congress has no power to subsidize any trade or any calling or any business on land or sea at the expense of the taxpayers of our country.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been, and always expect to be, a sincere friend of our shipping industries and an enthusiastic advocate of just and proper and honest legislation that will build up and restore our merchant marine. I believe every true American desires the supremacy of American ships in our overseas carrying trade, but I believe they prefer it along the lines of tonnage taxes, and not by subsidies. They see no necessity of taking money out of the Treasury and paying it to the present trust owners of ships for doing what they are already doing; and those most conversant with the subject even go so far as to declare that this subsidy scheme, if enacted into law, will not lay a new keel in any American shipyard or secure an additional ton of freight of over-seas commerce. Practically every dollar granted will go to the ships now afloat owned by the shipping trust.

Ship subsidies do not build ships—they create ocean-trading monopolies. Ship subsidies will not give workmen employment in American shipyards—the money will simply go into the capacious pockets of the plutocratic beneficiaries of the shipping trust. Every scheme of this kind simply permits respectable corruption and benefits the few at the expense of the many. The principle of ship subsidies is inherently wrong and absolutely indefensible—it is un-republican, undemocratic, and un-American, and no man who understands the question can justify the steal in the face of the facts. If the Congress should pass a ship-subsidy bill, I believe the people will demand its repeal in less than five years, but I hope the wisdom of this House will never permit such an iniquitous bill to pass.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we want to restore our merchant marine, and gain our lost prestige on the high seas, we must go back to first principles, and return to the policies of the early statesmen of our country, whose wise and far-seeing legislation in those days made us the mistress of the seas. I have earnestly sought to do this ever since I have been in Congress, but thus far without success. I have a bill now pending and which has been pending for years, which seeks to accomplish in this matter what the people desire. It is a simple yet comprehensive measure for a discriminatory graduated tonnage tax in favor of American bottoms. If it were adopted it would restore our merchant marine and not take one dollar out of the pockets of the taxpayers of our country. I send this bill of mine to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time,

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18977) to regulate commerce with foreign nations, so as to equalize the footing of American vessels with foreign, to make preference for the use of American ships in our own trade, to extend the postal service by American steamships, and to promote commercial independence.

Be it enacted, etc., That the law relating to vessels, to the duties laid upon tonnage, and to the ocean mail service in force when this act shall be approved, be, and the same is hereby, supplemented and amended as follows:

PART I.—TONNAGE DUTIES.

SECTION 1. That all vessels not of the United States arriving at any port under the jurisdiction of the United States, after this act shall take effect, shall be liable for and shall pay additional, or extra, tonnage duties, except as provided in section 2, for the purpose of equalizing the footing of American ships with those of other countries, whose vessels, as a rule, cost much less to build and especially to navigate, that there may be fair and equitable commerce with all countries, proper competition between our own vessels and those of the nations with whom we trade, and a chance for the survival of the marine of the United States.

DIRECT TRADE.

SEC. 2. Clause 2. But if a vessel not of the United States shall arrive direct from her own country, its colony or possession, in ballast, or with merchandise of its production, or with passengers, in a less proportion than one-third of her burden or capacity for freight or passengers, as aforesaid, and the country of said vessel holds out to its shipowners by law the payment of bounty, subsidy, or subvention of some sort, in consideration of making voyages like the one in question, then, in addition to the regular and the additional duties found as provided in clause 2, there shall be added a countervailing duty, which shall amount to one-half the additional duty provided in clause 2.

Clause 3. Surveyors of tonnage shall ascertain and certify to the collector the proportion of carrying ability or capacity occupied by passengers, by freight, and by ballast of any kind, respectively, and no vessel so laden and coming shall be discharged of cargo, except upon acceptance of the report of the surveyor by the master or agent of the vessel.

Clause 4. Every vessel coming from her own country, but bringing cargo the whole or a portion of which has been produced in another or foreign country, shall be considered as engaged in indirect trade, unless seven-eighths of her cargo shall be of home production, and she shall be liable to payment of duties under the provisions of section 3, according to size.

privilege thus enjoyed, as follows: On arrival from Atlantic to Gulf ports, or vice versa, 30 cents per ton; on arrival from Atlantic or Gulf ports to Pacific ports, or vice versa, 71 per ton; on arrival from any port of the mainland to any port of the insular possessions of the United States, or vice versa, $2 per ton, gross measurement in all cases. Any vessel violating this section or refusing to pay duties as aforesaid shall not be permitted or allowed by the collector to load cargo or passengers in a port of the United States.

Sec. 8. That a duty of 50 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on vessel tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel that shall enter a port of the United States from a port of her own country, either with or without cargo, passengers, or mails, if she has not come direct, but has called or stopped on the way at a port of a country not her own and there, either in or off the port, has received merchandise, passengers, or mails, and the same shall be landed in the United States, unless said vessel has been built in the United States, or is owned by citizens of the United States to the extent of 40 per cent, to be proved to the satisfaction of the collector and the district attorney of any United States court.

Sec. 9. That a tonnage duty, to be termed light tax, of 3 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel, not of the United States, that shall enter a port of the United States, shall be levied and collected, in addition to duties required by preceding sections, before clearance for sea, except in case such vessel shall clear in ballast, or may have made port in distress, or was built in the United States.

Sec. 10. That a tonnage duty, to be termed race tax, of 4 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel not of the United States, that shall enter a port of the United States and therein discharge merchandise, passengers, or mails, shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties required by preceding sections, if such vessel shall be manned to an extent exceeding 10 per cent of the crew by persons belonging to a different race of men from the owners of such vessel.

Sec. 11. That the regular tonnage tax referred to in preceding sections shall be paid by all vessels in the foreign trade, whether American or foreign, and be hereafter collected on every entry at the custom-house and computed on the gross admeasurement. The present rates shall be increased from 6 cents to 10 cents per ton, and from 3 cents to 5 cents per ton, respectively. American steamers carrying mails shall pay tonnage tax but once a year.

PART 2.—EXPORT PREMIUMS.

Sec. 12. That all collections of tonnage duties and charges of every sort against vessels of every kind, whether regular, or additional, or countervailing duties, light, race, and immigrant tax, entrance and clearance fees, and permits provided by this and former acts to be levied, collected, and paid at the custom-house, and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures paid into the courts from violations of the navigation and revenue laws of the United States, this act included, shall, after the passage of this act, be set apart in the Treasury as a special fund from which to pay, first, for the support of marine hospitals for American seamen, and, second, for the payment of premiums to exporters of merchandise for giving preference in the employment of vessels to those of the United States not in fact owned by themselves. No part of this fund shall be covered into the general Treasury, but the unpaid portion of it shall be carried over from year to year.

Sec. 13. That on and after fifteen months from the passage of this act there shall be paid, out of the special fund in the Treasury provided for by section 12 of this act, to the bona fide owners and exporters of merchandise the growth, production, and manufacture of the United States, to foreign countries not adjoining the United States, in vessels of the United States registered pursuant to law and not owned in fact by themselves, as follows: A premium of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 65 miles from the tidal or national boundary of the mainland of the United States; and a premium of one-half of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 400 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of three-fourths of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 1,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 2,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 1/2 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 3,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 3/4 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 4,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 1/2 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 5,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 2 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 6,000 miles and upward from the port of departure in the United States. These premiums to an exporter shall be payable to his order upon report of the clearance of the vessel, with a statement of the collector of the port fixing the value of the shipment, which must be sworn to by an appraiser for the United States, within ten days, according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, distances between ports to be determined by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and stated in sea miles.

PART 3.—MAIL CARRIAGE.

Sec. 14. That the postal act approved March 3, 1891, be, and it is hereby, amended to provide and to read as follows:

Clause 1. That the Postmaster-General shall as often as once in each year advertise for informal proposals for the carriage of mails by sea in American vessels between such ports of our own and other countries as to exporters may seem advantageous. The advertisements shall be inserted four times weekly in a paper printed in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle, describing the service as that of mail and naval vessels adapted to promote the postal, commercial, and naval interests of the United States and to subserve those of their owners as well. Proposers will state the size and speed of vessels, number of trips yearly, remuneration required, time when service could be begun, and such other particulars as may seem useful for the Government to consider.

Clause 2. That within one month after receipt of informal proposals, the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General shall together consider their contents, the wants of the Navy and the needs of the postal service, and fix upon a schedule of requirements that will satisfy both interests. The Secretary of the Navy will control the plans for the vessels, and the Postmaster-General will decide upon the postal programme, and the two together shall advertise formally to let contracts for the running of the vessels required. Such advertisements shall be inserted in the same papers that called for informal proposals four times weekly, describing the route, the character of the vessels, the size and speed, the number of trips yearly, the times of sailing, and the time when the service shall begin. These requirements shall not be such that bidders can not be found. The Navy Department shall pay the cost of formal advertising. The letting of such contracts shall be the same as prescribed by law for the letting of inland mail contracts, so far as shall be applicable to vessels. Every contract must have the approval of the President, and none shall exceed the limit of thirty years; but the President may require improved service every ten years.

Clause 3. That the vessels employed under any contract made under this act shall constitute a line, which shall have a sailing day or days, at most, as often as three times a week, but no line shall monopolize the carriage of mails to any foreign port.

Clause 4. That the owners of lines contracting for mail carriage may be persons or corporations, but if the latter, the contract must be with the individuals of the board of directors, who must be citizens of the United States and at all times prepared to swear that not more than 40 per cent of the capital stock of the corporation is held by aliens, and that a citizen manages the line, under penalty of forfeiture of the contract, which, in such case, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to declare. No line shall combine or consolidate with another, under the same penalty.

Clause 5. That the vessels employed under this act shall be commanded by citizens, and at least two officers and two engineers of each vessel shall also be citizens of the United States, and on each departure a portion of the crew, inclusive of firemen, shall owe allegiance to the United States, to wit: During the first year, one-eighth thereof; during the next two years, one-fifth; during the fourth and fifth years, one-fourth; during the sixth and seventh, three-tenths; during the remainder of contract time, one-third thereof. But no mail carrier shall be delayed in sailing to obtain a crew in above proportion until ten years after the passage of this act. It may be stipulated that mails may be brought from abroad, the foreign country paying for the service; also that passengers and baggage and freight may be carried both ways. After July 1, 1910, the mails shall be sent foreign by vessels of the United States and no others, without express consent of Congress; and in cases of need, when private enterprise fails to undertake or carry on the mail service at reasonable or lawful rates of remuneration, the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to furnish suitable vessels of the Navy in which to send mails foreign or bring them home, until the further order of Congress.

Clause 6. That all vessels in the postal service and hereafter built for it, shall be prepared to receive arms for immediate use as cruisers, scouts, or transports in time of war; and in future their plans and specifications shall be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, the strength and stability to be sufficient to carry armament required in naval service, and the materials of hull and machinery to be such as will command the highest classification given by American inspection of vessels. And all such vessels hereafter built shall be constructed under the inspection of a naval officer detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, to whom he will report in writing the progress made monthly, whether or not the contract is being well performed, and when the trial trip may be made; and no vessel not approved by the Secretary as fulfilling the contract, as to hull and machinery, shall be accepted for the service.

Clause 7. That the compensation to be agreed upon and paid for such service as may be contracted for under this act shall be reasonable and as low as responsible bidders will perform the same, having regard to the encouragement to vessels provided by this act, to the commercial circumstances in each case, and to the rate of compensation for similar service paid by other countries. Where a bid may be deemed too high, the programme may be modified or the route readvertised, payment for services to be made at the end of each round voyage. If the contract shall fail to be fulfilled for six months, the President may declare it forfeited, and thereupon the route shall be readvertised and let to another bidder, but on no account shall the service be abandoned to other countries. Readvertising shall be done in a paper printed in Washington, D. C.

Clause 8. That upon each mail vessel the United States shall have transported, free of charge, one messenger, whose duty shall be to receive, sort, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States, and who shall be provided with suitable room for himself and for the mails.

Clause 9. That officers of the Navy may volunteer for service on mail vessels, and when accepted by the contractors be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy whenever in his opinion such assignment can be made without harm to the service, and while in said employment they shall receive furlough pay from the Government and such other compensation from the contractors as may be agreed upon: Provided, That they shall be required to perform only such duties as pertain to the service.

Clause 10. That said vessels shall carry as cadets one American boy under 21 years of age for each 2,000 tons gross measurement, who shall be taught the duties of the service as seamen or engineers, rank as petty officers, and receive reasonable remuneration from the contractors.

Clause 11. That said vessels may be taken and used by the Government as cruisers, scouts, or transports at any time, on payment to the owners of their fair, actual value at the time of the taking, either for service by the voyage, by the month, or year, or may be purchased outright, and if there shall be a disagreement as to the rental or value, then the same shall be settled by two appraisers, one appointed by each party, they selecting a third, who shall act in case the two disagree. In the event of breaking up a line by taking its vessels, the Government shall give the contractors the time necessary to provide other vessels for carrying out their contract when opportunity offers, or the contract may be terminated by mutual consent.

Clause 12. That all vessels, not of the United States, coming with passengers from a country to which said vessels do not belong, shall pay to the collector of the port where landed an immigrant tax of 10 cents for each nautical mile of distance from port to port, for each and every passenger brought from such country, who shall be landed with his or her effects.

PART 4.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Sec. 15. That marine underwriters or insurance companies of all countries, in person or through agencies in the ports of the United States, may issue policies on hulls or cargoes in conformity with State regulations, where such have been made, on voyages outward or inward, but any discrimination made by them or their agents, either in the clauses of policies, in the premium rates, or effected through inspection or classification of hulls or otherwise, which shall tend to favor the employment of foreign vessels or tend to disfavor, embarrass, or inhibit the engagement of vessels of the United States, shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine as a penalty in a district court of the United States. Said fine for the first offense shall not exceed $5,000 nor be less than $3,000; for a second offense said fine shall not be less than $10,000, and for the third offense and each one afterwards said fine shall be not less than $15,000 nor more than $25,000, and suits shall be prosecuted by the attorney of the court aforesaid for each and every violation of this section that may be brought to his notice. In any such suit it shall be no defense that the orders or directions of any person, or the rules and regulations of any association of underwriters, shipowners, merchants, marine surveyors, or their agents, whether citizens or aliens, or that the inspection or classification of any vessel by any person, society, or authority whatsoever, can be claimed to justify the discrimination that may have been the subject of complaint, and which is not to be justified on any grounds. A refusal to insure goods, wares, and merchandise under this act to be carried by American vessels shall forfeit the privilege of doing business in American ports, or make the parties finable as above, to be decided by the court, in a suit brought for the forfeiture of said privilege, which is to be enjoyed under this act only.

SEC. 16. That in a time of peace it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government to receive tenders of service or to make contracts to be performed by vessels not of the United States, and in all contracts for the performance of public work it must be provided that water transportation shall be performed by vessels of the United States. And the transportation of passengers, mails, goods, wares, and merchandise between the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the ports and places of the Panama Canal Zone is hereby declared to be reserved for vessels of the United States under the coastwise laws.

SEC. 17. That in a time of war it shall not be lawful for vessels not of the United States to import or land anywhere in the United States, its Territories or possessions, any goods, wares, or merchandise, the growth, production, or manufacture of a country not at peace with the United States. And all goods, wares, and merchandise imported by a vessel not of the United States admitted to storage in bonded warehouse is hereby limited to a period of ten days, within which time the lawful duties and charges must be paid, whether entered for consumption or reexportation. In cases where minimum or reciprocity duties are imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise imported there shall be levied, collected, and paid full rates of duty, notwithstanding any convention, if the same shall have been brought in by a vessel not of the United States or not of the reciprocating country from which such goods, wares, or merchandise were exported; or if the same, not being the growth, production, or manufacture of a country contiguous to the United States, shall have been brought across the line from such country.

SEC. 18. That on and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the space of thirty months, but no longer, for any bona fide citizen, citizens, or domestic corporation engaged in, or intending immediately to engage in, the carriage of merchandise, mails, or passengers in the foreign trade of the United States, to import and enter at the custom-house, stating the foregoing facts under oath, for his or their own use, and that of no other person or persons in said trade, and not to be held for sale or sold to other citizens, and not to be employed in the domestic trade more than two months in the year, any vessel or vessels suitable therefor, of size not less than 2,000 tons gross, and of age not more than five years, and have the same duly registered as a vessel of the United States but upon the following conditions, nevertheless, to wit, that all vessels imported in the first six months of the term of thirty months, as aforesaid, shall pay a duty of $4 per ton gross measurement; those imported in the second six months shall pay a duty of $5 per gross ton; those imported in the third six months shall pay a duty of $6 per ton; those imported in the fourth six months shall pay a duty of $7 per ton; those imported in the fifth six months shall pay a duty of $8 per ton gross measurement, on all vessels less than one year old. A deduction of duty may be made on all vessels according to age beyond one year, to wit, of 5 per cent on those between one and two years; of 10 per cent on those between two and three years; of 15 per cent on those between three and four years; and of 20 per cent on those between four and five years of age. The Treasury Department may allow credit on duties for imported tonnage to the extent of six and twelve months' time on secured notes of owners with interest at 2 per cent per annum. And it shall be unlawful upon penalty, as for a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not exceeding $1,000 in a district court of the United States, for the master, owner, or agent of any foreign-built freighting vessel or yacht not duly registered, enrolled, or licensed to fly the flag of the Union from or abaft of the aftermost mast, spar, or pole, except as a signal of distress.

SEC. 19. That the making or offering to make a contract for the exclusive carriage of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to or from foreign countries, conditioned partly on the shipment of same in the future by no other vessel or line of vessels, and promising or making of payment of rebates of freightage thereon, in consideration of making such contract, by an owner or agent of any vessel or line of vessels, is hereby declared a misdemeanor, punishable by fine in a district court of the United States of not less than $3,000 or more than $10,000 on each conviction of such owner or agent of any such offending vessel or line of vessels, and if under foreign registry such vessel or line of vessels shall not thereafter be permitted either to land or to load cargo in the United States. Where it may become known to, or suspected by, the collector of any port that rebates of freightage are offered, promised, or paid in an endeavor to engross the carriage of export or import goods, wares, or merchandise, he shall forthwith place the facts, or his information and belief, before the district attorney, who shall take proper steps to ascertain the truth and to break up the practice. And for the prevention of frauds that might be attempted under this act in indirect carrying, foreign vessels not built in the country of registry shall undergo a probation of three years before being adjudged by the collector as belonging in good faith to the country of registration, unless built in the United States.

SEC. 20. That nothing in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, or in the act to protect commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, or in any act amendatory of either of said acts, shall hereafter apply to the establishment of railroad rates or to the changing or publication of the same with respect to foreign commerce, if carried in vessels of the United States; or shall prohibit any agreement or reasonable act with respect to interstate transportation that is not in restraint of commerce with foreign nations or among the several States; or shall hereafter authorize fines for any violation of such acts.

SEC. 21. That, after the 1st day of January, 1900, it shall be unlawful to transport foreign commerce that has been imported, or that is designed for export, at a less rate than is charged between the same points for the transportation of domestic interstate commerce of like character, unless carried in vessels of the United States to and from the same.

SEC. 22. That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government to issue a register, enrollment, or license for any vessel built abroad, except such as have been captured in war and condemned as prize, such as have been forfeited for a violation of the laws and bought at marshal's sale, or may have belonged to a country that has come under the Government of the United States, or become entitled to registry in compliance with this act.

SEC. 23. That the regular duties of tonnage, computed on the gross admeasurement in all cases, and the usual passenger tax shall be paid alike by vessels of the United States and foreign vessels on each and every arrival, in foreign trade, when entry of vessel is made. Immigrant tax shall be paid when permit is given for the landing of passengers from vessels not of the United States brought from countries to which said vessels do not belong. All additional tonnage duties and the light and race tax shall be paid before landing permit is issued, but if landing be delayed, then, at latest, at the end of two months from date of entrance. American vessels carrying crews of which one-eighth the number are citizens or owe allegiance to the United States shall have rebate of tonnage tax to the extent of 20 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 30 per cent; if three-eighths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 40 per cent; if one-half the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 50 per cent; if five-eighths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 75 per cent; and if three-fourths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 100 per cent. The United States shipping commissioner shall ascertain and certify to the collector the proportion of citizens in each crew where rebate of tax may be demanded. Regular apprentices, as seamen or engineers, if citizens, shall count as men in computing rebate of tax. In trade to and from tropical countries where it may not be practicable to find any but natives of such regions to fill vacancies in the crews of vessels permits may be issued, on applications under oath of the owner or agent, by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for one year or while necessary to carry a crew partly such as it may be practicable to engage in any given place. In all cases where vessels may be fined for infractions of law, in accordance with the Statutes, it shall be unlawful for the Secretary of any Department to remit any portion thereof without an order of court duly recorded; and it shall also be unlawful for the Commissioner of Navigation to order refunds of tonnage taxes that have been paid to a collector without trial and judgment of the case.

SEC. 24. That for twelve years from the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the judge of any district court of the United States to grant final papers of naturalization to any seaman of a foreign country who can speak and read the English language on his taking the oath prescribed by law, and swearing also that he has sailed one or more years in vessels of the United States, naming them, and that he intends so to do in the future, naming the vessel that he will sail in next.

SEC. 25. That sections 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 22, 24, and 25 of this act shall take effect upon its passage, and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 17, 21, and 23 in one year and thirty days thereafter; and all acts or provisions of law in conflict herewith are hereby repealed; also any and all articles or clauses in existing maritime reciprocity conventions or in treaties, whose time fixed has expired, that are in contravention herewith, are hereby annulled and abrogated, in conformity with the stipulations and equities of said agreements and the rights of the United States; and the formal notice of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to all countries concerned that, in one year from the approval of this act by the President, all diplomatic agreements for the suspension of commercial regulations, or for the forbearance to enact them, so far as the aforesaid agreements are terminable by notice, are receded from on the part of the United States, and all enactments to carry out said agreements are by this act repealed. Any agreement, as above, not yet terminable by notice, may be observed until its term expires, but not longer.

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill of mine speaks for itself, and I have had it read at the Clerk's desk for the purpose of getting it in the Record, so that the people who are interested in this great shipping question can read the bill and judge accordingly. I place this tonnage-tax bill by the side of the ship-subsidy bill and submit the merits of the two measures to the impartial judgment of the taxpayers of the country, confident that the general principles of my bill will be accepted by them in preference to those of the ship-subsidy bill. My bill is a practicable, honest, businesslike measure, and, in the opinion of those most competent to testify regarding this matter, its enactment into law will go far to solve the shipping problem, restore our merchant marine, place our flag on the high seas, and give us ere long at least nine-tenths of our ocean-going commerce.

My bill is a tonnage-tax bill, and the foreigner pays the tax. In other words, all goods brought to this country in foreign bottoms would have to pay a tonnage tax on the ship's gross admeasurement. This being the case, foreign shipowners would have to charge higher freight rates than American shipowners, with the consequence that the American shipowners would get all our ocean-carrying trade. This would create a demand for American-built ships, and the demand would revive our languishing shipbuilding industries, and the revival of those industries would give employment to thousands and thousands of workmen on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Of course no foreign shipowner will commend my bill. No subsidy grabber advocates it. No shipowners' trust favors it. No marine monopoly likes it. Naturally every foreign shipowner is absolutely opposed to it, because every foreign shipowner knows that if a bill like this should become a law in this country in less than ten years the United States would be the mistress of the seas and do the major part of the deep-sea carrying trade of the world.

Sir, I do not expect foreign shipowners to favor my bill, but I know when the question is understood by the taxpayers of our country every patriotic American will be in favor of it in preference to a subsidy bill, which takes money out of the pockets of the people of this country and pays it over in the nature of a gratuity to a special business interest. There is no graft in my bill; no private gain at public expense. It is just a plain, simple, practical, business, maritime measure for a tax on the tonnage of the gross admeasurement of foreign ships.

This bill of mine has met with much favor from people opposed to subsidies and who want to see Congress do something to revive our merchant marine. My measure is a tonnage-tax bill and nothing more. It is not a subsidy bill nor a free-ship bill nor a discriminating-duty bill, and under its provisions it would not take one dollar out of the Treasury of the Government or out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country. It makes the foreigner pay the tax, and this ought not to be objectionable to the Republicans, because up to very recently they claimed that under the protective tariff the foreigner paid the tax, but I understand they have abandoned that absurd claim and now admit that the consumer pays the tax.

This tonnage tax on the gross admeasurement of foreign ships in favor of American ships is, I believe, substantially in line with the policy of the men who molded our legislative marine history in the early days of the Republic. The bill is endorsed by the American Shipping Society of the United States, of which Hon. W. W. Bates, of Denver, Colo.—formerly United States shipping commissioner—is president, and has been approved by some of the ablest writers and thinkers and political economists in our land. It is a comprehensive bill, but when studied its provisions are very simple, and those who know most about the subject affirm that if this bill were enacted into law it would solve our maritime problem, restore our merchant marine, build up our shipyard industries, place our flag on ships on every sea, and give us a great auxiliary navy in case of foreign complications; and it would accomplish all of this without doing violence to any of the principles of our Government or taking one dollar out of the Treasury or the pockets of the people.

The bill may not be perfect, and if it is not, I shall be glad to do my share to perfect it; but I believe, from a careful study of all bills that have been offered on this subject in Congress for the past ten years, that my bill presents the most speedy and effective remedy. I know it is said by the friends of the shipping trust and the advocates of subsidies that the bill discriminates in favor of American ships against foreign ships; but I reply that we never can build up our shipping industries and restore our merchant marine unless we adopt the policy of free ships, or a policy that will discriminate in some way in favor of our own ships and against foreign ships. The fact is that we discriminate now against our own ships in favor of foreign ships. My bill simply reverses the situation. I sincerely believe that if this bill, or one similar to it, containing substantially its provisions, should be enacted into law, that the United States in a few years would become mistress of the seas, and American ships, built in our own shipyards, would do all of our own ocean commerce besides a great part of the deep-sea carrying trade of the other countries of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill of mine has been pending in the Committee on Merchant Marine all winter. I have had it pending in every Congress for the past ten years. Why is it not passed? Because there is no graft in it for any special interest. I have done everything in my power this year to get the committee to favorably report it, but thus far my appeals have been in vain. I indulged the hope at the beginning of this Congress that something would be done ere we adjourned for the American merchant marine along the lines of a graduated system of tonnage taxes in favor of American bottoms and against foreign-built ships. That was the policy of the early days of the Republic, and under it our shipping industries thrived, and American-built ships, carrying the American flag, were seen in every port and on every ocean of the world. If we will repeal the laws against our merchant marine now on the statute books and put in their place the navigation laws of the early days of the Republic, the problems of our shipping industries and deep-sea carrying trade will be solved, and in less than ten years we will have a merchant fleet second to none in the world and through it aid our magnificent Navy and save to the taxpayers of our country millions and millions of dollars every year.

Sir, for many years the leading Republicans favored the policy that I am now advocating. They wrote it in their national platform in 1896, and I hope they will put a plank this year in their national platform in favor of a graduated system of tonnage taxes to restore the American merchant marine. I shall go to Denver, and I will do my best to have such a plank written in the national Democratic platform. If I can have my way, the plank will be about as follows:

We favor immediate action by Congress for the resumption of the shipping policy which prevailed under the first five Presidents and which brought forth and maintained the best merchant marine on the ocean without the cost of a cent to the American people.

We denounce the Republican party in Congress for its willful neglect of our shipping in the foreign trade, Congress having done nothing whatever for its revival since the civil war, except to connive at the passage of unconstitutional and vicious bounty and subsidy bills, utterly useless for the object in view and only a corrupt expenditure of public revenue, really in the interest of foreign nations.

Mr. Chairman, that is the kind of a plank I want to see in the next national Democratic platform, and I will do my best to get it in our platform, because I am now, always have been, and always will be a friend of the American merchant marine. I long for the coming of the day when American ships will be on every sea and our flag gloriously floating on the breeze in every port. I am willing to go as far as any man in this country to legislate for the restoration of the American merchant marine to all its former glory and to secure for the American people their just share of the over-seas carrying trade of the world. As I have said, I do not agree with the reasons advanced by the advocates of a subsidy bill as to the cause of the decline of our merchant marine and the loss to the United States of our over-seas carrying trade. I know, and every man who has investigated this subject knows, that our loss of deep-sea commerce is due entirely to our own iniquitous legislation and shortsighted policies.

If the American Congress would legislate intelligently regarding this subject, we could restore our merchant marine and secure nine-tenths of all our commerce on the high seas, exports and imports, without a ship subsidy or without taking a single dollar from the pockets of the taxpayers to give subsidies to favored shipowners and shipbuilders. This whole subject is a very simple matter when reduced to an intelligent business proposition. We do not need to take a dollar out of the pocket of the taxpayers or out of the Treasury of the United States to revive our shipbuilding industries or restore our merchant marine. All we need to do is to legislate intelligently, repeal the iniquitous laws against our deep-sea shipping now on our statute books, put in their place laws similar to the navigation laws that were enacted by the early statesmen of the country—laws that built up our merchant marine in those historic days—laws that placed our flag on the high seas and gave us nine-tenths of our entire over-seas carrying trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to inquire of the gentleman from New York what he means practically in speaking about foreign bottoms. I have my own views about it and most everyone else understands it. Now, what does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. SULZER. I mean by foreign bottoms foreign ships.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Owned by foreigners?

Mr. SULZER. Carrying a foreign flag.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose they are owned by American citizens and carry a foreign flag.

Mr. SULZER. They are foreign bottoms, the flag determines the character of the ship.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If we owned all of the ships in the world and they carried the Cuban flag—

Mr. SULZER. They would be Cuban bottoms.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, all right; I understand you. My opinion on this subsidy subject is this: We had a low tariff from 1846 to 1860, when our ships carried from 75 to 85 per cent of the tonnage—

Mr. SULZER. Of our own exports and imports.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Seventy-five to 85 per cent of our exports and imports. Then we had a low tariff, the lowest we ever had since 1812 or 1815—Mr. Blaine said. The tariff of 1846, the Walker tariff, was about 20 per cent, and the people on land and sea prospered as never before—so much so that all political parties in 1857 agreed on the tariff of that year; they wiped out and quit protection. The rates of the act of 1857 were thus reduced to shut off the revenues from an overflowing Treasury. Everybody agreed to the prosperity that these Democratic tariffs brought about.

We never had anybody else clamoring for protection even when we made the civil-war tariffs, but as an incident to and necessarily in pursuance of those high tariffs we raised the rates to get war revenue to run the civil war. The rates were so high that protection came in inevitably, and under that protective tariff certain classes got a taste of high protection, special interests so profited by it, and yet the great body of the people never prospered as they had prospered under the Democratic tariff of 1846.

Now, then, if you want to build up the ships on the sea, reduce the tariff so that the foreign ships can come here with a foreign load that we want to buy. These ships won't come empty. Let them come loaded, and then they will take away an American load that the English people want to buy and we wish to sell. That is the only way we can ever rebuild and restore our ships to the sea without subsidies.

In addition to that the unnecessary, and I may say the hotbed or unnatural, inducements that a high tariff gives to the people on the land, induces these people to take their money out of the ships on the sea, and invest in mining and in making steel and iron, which, by the way, all began thriving under a Democratic tariff from 1846 to 1860. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place some letters in the Record touching the tobacco question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing some letters in reference to the tobacco question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I began the investigation of this tobacco tax in the fall of 1901. On March 22, 1902, I introduced a bill (1) to untax leaf tobacco, and (2) to allow the grower to hand stem and hand twist his own growth of tobacco. The hand-twist provision would interfere some with the revenues, and we dropped that, and the House in 1903 passed a compromise bill to simply untax the leaf. This Tax Commissioner Yerkes said (to the House committee) produced no revenue. The Senate killed this bill, and May 10, 1904, I appealed for my people to Attorney-General P. C. Knox to proceed against the tobacco trust, which lurked behind that tax—but I appealed in vain. Here is the correspondence we had on the subject:

Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX,
Attorney-General of the United States.

MAY 10, 1904.

SIR: During the recent session of Congress my attention was sharply drawn to the existence and operations of a tobacco trust which I found was exercising absolute control of the markets and of the prices for tobacco raised in my district and in the adjacent country, and elsewhere. It is commonly known as the British-American Tobacco Trust, but technically "The British-American Tobacco Company (Limited)." I have every reason to be most positively convinced that it is now engaged in prosecuting its business in a manner directly in defiance of the statute, restraining commerce between the States and with foreign countries, to the great injury and loss of the tobacco growers and the tobacco business of this country.

This company, it can be definitely shown, is in agreement with the Regie agents in this country, whereby they refrain from competing with each other in buying tobacco, fix the prices that all shall pay, parcel the territory between them, and rigidly abstain from encroaching upon each other's domain; and having absorbed all other concerns into its organization and found means effectively to stifle and destroy all competitors, it has founded for itself an absolute monopoly. The fact of this is abundantly apparent. The proof of it may be found. The fact itself affords most positive presumptive evidence.

In view of the great injuries inflicted upon the people I represent in Congress through the unlawful operations of this trust and its coalition with foreign tobacco buyers, I feel it my duty to call your especial attention to the hearing before the subcommittee on Internal Revenue of the House at the session of Congress just adjourned, a copy of which is inclosed, and also to a copy of an article that appeared in the Cincinnati Enquirer of September 28, 1902, which together make plain the existence of the several companies and the agreement by which they became a trust and monopoly. I would refer you also to the several speeches made during the session by Messrs. STANLEY, Trimble, HOPKINS, FLOOD, SIMS, and myself, in which all the facts are discussed and which may aid you in discovering the sources of proof.

It is abundantly manifest that all the evils and injuries that the statute meant to prevent are being inflicted by this combination, that it is operating in direct restraint of interstate commerce and foreign trade, and that it is a monopoly in the exact sense contemplated and forbidden by the statute, and in view of the vast injury being inflicted upon our people and the incalculable losses they are being forced to sustain, I desire respectfully to suggest that you cause proper action brought in the courts, civil and criminal, to dissolve the trust, to enjoin its operations, and to punish the individuals who are so flagrantly and contemptuously defying the law.

Very respectfully,

JNO. W. GAINES.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 13, 1904.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your letter of May 10, relative to the British-American Tobacco Company (Limited), I have referred it with its inclosures to Mr. Abraham M. Tillman, United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, with direction to receive any evidence you possess, or that may be submitted by you or others, tending to show a violation of the Federal law relative to restraints on interstate or foreign commerce, and with further direction to report such evidence to me, with his opinion as to its sufficiency to establish a violation of the law.

Yours, respectfully,

P. C. KNOX,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE,
Nashville, Tenn., May 23, 1904.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
Nashville, Tenn.

SIR: I would be glad to receive any evidence that you and others may submit bearing upon an alleged combination in restraint on interstate commerce in relation to the tobacco business.

I am instructed by the Attorney-General of the United States to receive and transmit to him such evidence, with an expression of my opinion as to whether it establishes a violation of the Sherman Act, etc., and would, therefore, be pleased to receive said aid from you or others.

Respectfully,

A. M. TILLMAN,
United States Attorney.

JUNE 27, 1904.

Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX,
Attorney-General of the United States.

SIR: Yours of the 18th of May was duly received, and I am now corresponding to it earlier than the developments in the case justify because of your early retirement from the office you now hold, in order that you may have time to take such further action in the premises as you may be inclined. The matter is left in most unfortunate plight if your successor shall feel disinclined, out of courtesy to you or otherwise, to change the procedure.

Your letter informs me that you had "referred" my letter and its inclosures to Mr. A. M. Tillman, United States district attorney, Nashville, "with direction to receive any evidence you possess or that may be submitted by you or others tending to show a violation of the Federal law relative to restraints on interstate or foreign commerce, and with further direction to report such evidence to me, with his opinion as to its sufficiency to establish a violation of the law."

Ten days later, I received a letter from Mr. Tillman saying: "I would be glad to receive any evidence that you and others may submit bearing upon an alleged combination in restraint of interstate commerce in relation to the tobacco business."

It thus appears that you have abdicated one of your prime functions and thrust it upon me "and others."

I do not fail to note that Mr. Tillman confines his invitation to me to evidence relating to interstate commerce, and to "an alleged combination," whereas the most grievous complaint relates to foreign commerce, and there are indications of more than one combination. This may have been thus limited by Mr. Tillman inadvertently, but as he was obeying your written instructions, I take it he had your letter before him as he wrote, and you yourself must have thus narrowed the scope of the inquiry and shut out evidence of any combination restraining foreign trade. It seems improbable that you would purposely do that, but as your action otherwise is even more remarkably incredible, I hesitate to lay the blame or the carelessness upon Mr. Tillman, whom I hold incapable of deceit or sharp practice.

Ordinarily, in any court anywhere it is held sufficient to justify official inquest to be apprised of a probable violation of law—"good reason to believe" being one of the accepted forms of expression. In view of the fact therefore that I had already furnished you with facts and allegations and citations from reliable sources and persons and had given you sources of information where you might gather the evidence that you demand me to gather for you, I must be permitted to express the most decided opinion that it ought to have given you that "good reason to believe" an offense was being committed which would justify you in setting the machinery of your office in operation to ferret it out.

In my original letter to you I lodged a most serious complaint, in the name and interest of the tobacco growers of Tennessee and Kentucky, particularly against the British-American Tobacco Company, the amalgamated successor of the Imperial Tobacco Company and the American Tobacco Company, and the Regie concerns, and I recommended that proper action, civil and criminal, be brought to restrain and punish them. The evidence which I inclosed and to which I cited you is in part official, consisting of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the House when considering several bills "for the relief of the tobacco growers" at the recent session. The witnesses were intelligent tobacco growers and dealers, mainly of Tennessee and Kentucky, including also several Members of Congress familiar with the facts demonstrating unlawful combination. I also referred you to various speeches of Members, wherein a great multiplicity of facts were disclosed conclusively establishing the fact that a combination exists.

In addition I sent you a copy of what purported to be an authorized statement, by cable, of the agreement to combine, which was effected at London September 27, 1902. It was well known that these two great trusts were long at swords' points, and that their fighting ceased and their local agents everywhere in this country ceased to compete. The testimony I furnished you shows, amply and conclusively, the result of that combination and furnishes such indisputable corroboration of the cable I furnished as to render its correctness reasonably certain.

And yet you seem to set this all aside, or at least deem it insufficient to warrant an official inquiry, and would have me and such other citizens as you may feel inclined to do the work devolving upon your Department under the law and for which Congress equipped you with four new officials and a half-million dollars.

Congress has equipped you richly for this work in men and money. You have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to extract testimony, and you are not hampered for means to do it with, which I "and others," upon whom you seek to thrust this burden and great responsibility have no kind of powers in the matter and no public money to pay the expense of it. The "evidence" which you invite us to lay before the district attorney to be by him sifted can not, for these very patent reasons, be nearly as complete and full as you could secure through your instrumentalities.

I have already furnished you with evidence taken before a committee of the House by the very people whom you invite to testify again, and if we should make the attempt, it would probably not be as full and complete as the evidence before that committee, for the reason that I am without your power to summon them and without your means to bear the expense of it. Besides that, if we should present it again, what reasons have we to hope that you will hold it sufficient, else why not proceed upon it?

In your speech at Pittsburg, October 14, 1902, speaking of a similar case, you used the language which shows that you are aware how difficult it would be for me to get the witnesses together and secure such evidence as will satisfy you. You said:

"As the result of information secured with much difficulty respecting this forbidden practice, a number of indictments were obtained against the offending roads and their principal traffic officers."

That evidence was secured through the effective compelling powers of your great office, and yet you say it was got with difficulty. You must know, then, how immeasurably more difficult it will be for me to succeed, and it is apparent that you do not know it as to cast a doubt upon your sincerity now.

On the 5th of January, 1903, you asked Congress to give you additional force and more money, that you might vigorously enforce the antitrust laws, and it promptly responded by giving you two assistants at salaries of $7,000 and $5,000, and two clerks at $1,800 each, and an extra appropriation of $500,000 was given you for this identical purpose—"for the enforcement of the provisions of the antitrust laws, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General in the employment of special counsel and agents of the Department of Justice, to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions under said acts in the courts of the United States." Your report of January 13, 1904, shows that you had expended only about $26,000 of this half million, and yet, with all that vast fund at your disposal and with those additional assistants and helps, when evidence of most flagrant wrongs upon the people are brought to your attention you fold your official hands and graciously invite the people to take the matter in their own hands, well knowing from your own experience how difficult it will be.

Considering your evident disinclination to enter upon this investigation and your knowledge of the insuperable difficulties in the way of securing voluntary evidence, and your rejection of the evidence with which I have already furnished you, the conclusion is not unwarranted that you do not want to establish a violation of the law and then send his opinion on "its" sufficiency, with "such evidence," to you, and you were to pass upon his opinion and the sufficiency of that evidence to make out a case under the law.

I thought, and still think, that the law required more than this of you, and so I wrote you at length, giving my reasons and seeking to convince you.

In February, 1903, Congress empowered you to employ special counsel and agents to aid you, as the law said "to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions under said acts" (commerce and antitrust acts).

This law directs you "to conduct proceedings"—that is, secure testimony, pertinent, in investigating complaints lodged with your Department under the law. But, instead of this you left "others" and myself "to conduct proceedings for this purpose."

This line of procedure was too narrow to do justice to this complaint, and I wanted it extended, and I had some apprehension that your successor might, out of consideration for you, or otherwise, leave the inquiry in that plight, and that the trust might thus escape because of my and "others" inability to hunt out evidence that would satisfy you, and I therefore insisted that you enlarge the instructions to the district attorney here before you went out of office, so that we might effectively proceed.

Judge of my surprise now to find you enlarging those instructions nunc pro tunc, exactly to meet my complaint set forth in my letter of June 27, and then turning to argue the matter with me as if you had done that at first.

You replied to this letter on June 30 as complacently as if it were true that "I sent your letter and the accompanying papers to the United States Attorney at Nashville, with instructions to investigate the subject and report to me with his recommendation, agreeably to the contemplation of the statute as in such cases and in conformity with sound and well-established practice. As part of that investigation I directed Mr. Tillman to receive and consider any evidence which might voluntarily be submitted, etc."

This is directly in variance, with men of candor and "intelligent judgment," with everything you had previously written me.

On May 18 you had written me, "Replying to your letter of May 10, relative to the British-American Tobacco Company (Limited) I have referred it, with its inclosures, to Mr. Abraham Tillman, United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, with directions to receive any evidence you possess, or that may be submitted by you to others, tending to show a violation of the Federal law relative to restraints of interstate or foreign commerce, and with further direction to report such evidence to me, with his opinion as to its sufficiency to establish a violation of the law."

If you had written me on May 18 what you wrote me on June 30, as shown above, I would not have rebelled against your line of procedure. In your first letter you make the distinct statement that the district attorney here was to receive and report up "such evidence" as "others" and myself might furnish him, and on June 27 I took you to task about this line of procedure, and on June 30 you say that you had given the district attorney here "instructions to investigate the subject," and that our contribution of evidence would be considered with and as "a part of that investigation." Did you give Mr. Tillman two instructions at the eleventh hour to meet my complaints?

Surely any intelligent letter writer, surely any one of the two "confidential clerks" Congress recently gave you could have written to me, by your permission, that you had instructed the district attorney here to join the tobacco growers and the people generally in securing this testimony. It did not require such an intelligent lawyer to write such a letter, nor do I believe one did.

I confess a lack of sufficient intelligence of that kind to cope with arguments like this. You labor hard in finding fault with my motives and intelligence for demanding that you do this very thing, which the law requires of you, and then you turn and tell me that you had already done it, in the face of your own statement to the contrary.

If you did do it, as you say you did, and if the district attorney here is now investigating the subject, of which I am not advised, and will make what I and "others" furnish him "a part of that investigation," then you have acknowledged everything that I demanded of you as right and legal.

But did you do it? I trust that you did, but I will not undertake to judge you upon your own accusation of yourself, and if the district attorney here is not investigating the subject, I leave you to escape your own discrepancy.

If you did direct the district attorney, as you say you did, why did you not so inform me in your first letter? Why keep your actions secret? Why withhold from the tobacco growers such important information? Were you not then, as you appear to be now, their friend? Were you afraid of the trusts? Were you afraid the president of the tobacco trust, elected a delegate to the Republican convention, which recently met in Chicago, would turn his guns on the Administration, and if not defeat the renomination of the President, secure his defeat in November?

Your first letter to me was published throughout the country, and led the people, including the tobacco journals, to believe that I, and not you or your Department, was to secure this testimony. Why did you not correct this? Does not your Administration believe in publicity, and have you not permitted the free publication of what you were doing in investigating trusts? Why so much secrecy about this instruction?

Surely, sir, it was not inadvertence that led you into two statements, which I have here shown from the very words of your letters. A man who vaunts his superior wisdom by setting himself up censor of others' intelligence, and proceeds to crush lesser mortals under the weight of his caustic denunciation, ought first to get himself above the possibility of committing slovenly errors himself before pointing out the errors of others.

I must not omit to say, for my own justification, that I entered upon this quest with an ardent, sincere purpose to run the tobacco trust to cover, and make it quit robbing the people, and I had the right to expect the Attorney-General to join me in it, as the law requires of him, instead of fencing with me as if it were politics, especially after the vaunting manner in which the Administration had proclaimed its purpose to do mighty things and set you hotfooted on the merger trail.

But you seem to have lost the scent. My only hope now is that your successor may be less of a politician and more of a lawyer, which my long service with him in the House fairly leads me to believe is true.

I beg to plead guilty to the charge that I would have spent more than you did of the half million dollars given you by Congress "to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions" against trusts. I would have spent more than $127.73 in the beef-trust case. I would not only have enjoined, but indicted it. I suggested to the district attorney in charge of this case, in Nashville, that if he indicted the defendants that he would break up this trust. He said, "If the injunction is disobeyed, we will have them up for contempt." But we see it is still in existence, and not only depressing the price of cattle and raising the price of beef, but is now visiting its heavy hand upon the people of Chicago in other terrible ways, all of which evils might have been avoided if my advice had been followed or you had done your duty in the first instance.

Spend this half million dollars? Yes. For what else was it given? To save and cover back into the Treasury and let the trusts escape? The law gave you all the power and Congress gave you ample funds and explicit directions to act, and now you come felicitating yourself that you have saved the money that you were ordered to spend to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions against the trusts, while the trusts go on ravaging the country and exacting more than Congress gave you every day from an outraged people.

It will be hard to convince the people at this day and time that a Republican Administration saved this money just to save the money and not the trusts.

It may pain you to know that I am accumulating evidences of an unlawful combination described in my complaint of May 10, and that "others" and myself will do our full part in this respect at our expense. The tobacco people are in bankrupt condition, victims of the trust, and are unable to spend much money or time in so doing. They will not "give up the ship," even to please a Republican Administration.

Now, finally, permit me to congratulate you that, even though at the behest of your old enemies, the trust and cross-tie magnates of your trust-ridden State, you have been appointed a member of the United States Senate. Yet I am pained to anticipate you may succeed in placing upon the statute books some of the wise suggestions of your incomparable ideas in amending our antitrust laws.

I am grieved to learn that in vacating the office of Attorney-General the President has been deprived of a charming companion in his political family, but, as the public press states, you "will greatly aid and recompense the President by aiding him in trust legislation in Congress next winter."

And, to be sure, you have cause for congratulations and should not be discouraged in the patriotic suggestions that you so ably set forth in your speech of November 14, 1902, at Pittsburg, wherein you suggested that the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, the so-called "misnamed Sherman act," might be so amended that thereafter it should apply to only "unreasonable" restraints instead of "all restraints" as at present; and that the "courts," which you pronounce the safest arbiters of the people's rights, should be empowered to decide in each case whether or not the restraint complained of is "reasonable or unreasonable."

As a result of this—your patriotic effort—a bill was introduced in the Senate at the present Congress by a leading Republican Senator to despoil this law along the lines of your wise suggestion.

It is true that you may not have been serious in making this suggestion, but a man of your then high position and of "intelligent judgment" and love of the people, which you admit yourself, is supposed to be always serious when he advises the public. According to my code of morals he should be.

Indeed, there may be some who are willing to excuse you for suggesting this amendment to this useful and popular law by saying that you were then bidding for trust influence, for votes, in the November elections of 1902 in Pittsburg and elsewhere, and the trusts' magnates of Pittsburg did not forget you, for in 1904 they came to your aid and comfort you—if the public press of your State is correct—by placing in your hands your Senatorial commission, taking you to the Senate, where it is possible they hoped that your wise suggestions, favorable to them, may not only become the law of the trusts, but the law of the land, as result of a devotion to at least your public utterances in their midst.

But I hope you may exercise you better judgment and incomparable wisdom before it is too late, and insist that this law remain unchanged, for it has stood the test of the courts, was placed on the statute books as the result of patriotic effort and the wisdom and votes of Republicans and Democrats and passed both Houses without a dissenting vote.

And while it has been feebly enforced, the people receiving but little protection from it, yet may they not hope that in the future it may be vigorously enforced, and that these giant combinations, robbing the people throughout our Republic by stifling Federal commerce, fostered under legislation you dare not uphold, may be brought to understand that God-made man has certain inalienable rights, amongst which is an open chance to make an honest living by the sweat of his face, and that it is against good morals and the law for him to be denied the right to exercise this, nature's gift, stifled by these lawless combinations.

JNO. W. GAINES.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., June 30, 1908.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have received your letter of June 27, in which you set forth freely and at length your criticisms of my course respecting your letter of May 18 relative to the British-American Tobacco Company. That letter transmitted to me a newspaper article and a report of a committee of the House of Representatives on the subject of illegal combinations believed to exist in foreign and interstate trade in tobacco.

No man of intelligent judgment could think that the matter as thus presented was ripe for determination by me and for proceedings by way of bill or prosecution, and of this you seem to be aware by your statement that you are writing me again earlier than the developments in the case "justify" because of my retirement from office.

I sent your letter and the accompanying papers to the United States district attorney at Nashville, with instructions to investigate the subject and report to me with his recommendation, agreeably to the contemplation of the statute as to such cases, and in conformity with sound and well-established practice. As part of that investigation, I directed Mr. Tillman to receive and consider any evidence which might voluntarily be submitted, judging that you and other parties interested would welcome an opportunity to aid in making the investigation as searching and complete as possible.

As to the precise form of my instructions, upon which you dwell with somewhat minute scrutiny and a suggestion of suspicion, the scope of the inquiry embraced foreign as well as interstate commerce, and you will find, if it is your intention to give the Government the benefit of what you claim to know about the case, that the district attorney will look into the foreign-commerce aspects of the case with the same care that he will devote to its relations to interstate commerce. Of this you were fully informed in my letter to you which you quote upon the first page of your letter of June 27.

I sincerely hope you will not allow any opinions you may hold as to the sincerity of my motives and the efficiency of my services in endeavoring to enforce the antitrust law to interfere with your giving the district attorney all the information you possess in relation to the tobacco trust. I do not mind in the least your criticisms, as I entertain the common opinion of both your motives and your intelligence.

I do mind, however, your attempt to run away from the responsibility you have assumed in calling upon the Government for aid in making a further investigation of the facts. Of course there is no prospect of successfully evading your obligations to give the Government the benefit of all you know upon the ground that the Attorney-General has power to summon witnesses, as you put it. For surely some one in your district will ask an intelligent lawyer if your statement in this respect is correct, and will be told that it is not. I think the people of the South are entitled to have your charges run to the ground, in doing which, as in the past with respect to vital interests, they will have the willing help of the Department of Justice. So please do not anticipate that the district attorney will draw any line upon his instructions by refusing to accept any testimony that you have, or that the Government will refuse him all assistance in its power at the proper time.

The Sherman Act provides that the district attorney shall prosecute violations of the law under the direction of the Attorney-General. I have referred your complaint to the district attorney of your district, with instructions to investigate it and report results to me with his opinion for my direction. In doing so, I have done my duty under the law as I understand it, and in so doing I have evidently disappointed you.

I now request that you submit your evidence to the district attorney or indicate to him the lines upon which evidence can be obtained. You have made your complaint, and you have had all the assistance the Government can give. It is not my purpose to allow you to get out from under this matter by writing insulting letters to the head of the Department.

I will not undertake the hopeless task of explaining to you why, with $500,000 of the Government's money at my disposal, I had not expended up to the time of my report to Congress to exceed $30,000. It had never occurred to me that the mere power of expending Government funds was in itself a justification for their expenditure. I am satisfied, however, that if you had been in my place you would not be subject to the criticism that you put upon my discretion.

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

NASHVILLE, TENN., August 10, 1904.

Hon. P. C. KNOX, Pittsburg, Pa.

SIR: On my return here, I received in due course yours of June 30, replying to mine of June 27, touching upon an issue which rose between us while you were Attorney-General of the United States.

Your letter occasioned no little surprise to find you wrought to unseemly petulance seeking to extricate yourself as Attorney-General from the labyrinth of inconsistencies into which you had fallen, and in which I exposed you, as such officer, and I would not further excite your irascibility were it not that your last letter distorts the issues between us and my silence might be construed into acquiescence.

When I first wrote you, I indulged in the presumption, hypertechneal, it is true, that you would do your full duty, investigate my complaint against the tobacco trust by yourself, as Attorney-General, securing testimony, and with that testimony and such evidence as I had filed with you make a thorough investigation of the tobacco trust. But you replied, and in effect informed me that you would dispose of the matter upon "such evidence" as "others" and myself would file with your Department; that "its sufficiency to establish a violation of the law" would determine your judgment.

Taking you at your word, our tobacco growers met June 6 and appointed an "evidence committee" to collect all the testimony possible, with "others" and myself to assist them, to be filed with your Department. This committee soon announced that it was meeting with great difficulties, being without equipment to act. But not so with me in collecting the testimony I sought, but in view of the fact that you had unexpectedly determined to resign your office July 1 and the difficulty with which the committee was being confronted my second letter was written with an urgent purpose to persuade you before you vacated your office to institute preliminary inquiry yourself and utilize the inquisitorial powers at your command in ferreting out evidence upon which to proceed against this trust instead of expecting "others" and myself to do it for you, as suggested in your reply to me of May 18 last.

I sought to show that, in my opinion, it was your province and duty under the law; that you alone could do it effectively, and your full cooperation was imperative, having at your command all the instrumentalities and having furnished you certain evidence and citations in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS in your library and other pertinent data, which clearly and unmistakably pointed to the existence of an unlawful combination. I had a right to expect that you, as Attorney-General, after your much-vaunted exploits in the merger case, would seize the opportunity to put this gigantic monster in chains.

The Administration had drawn a flaming sword and seemed eager to have the enemy pointed out that it might smite him hip and thigh, but it seems now that it was not even out after windmills, but was the windmill itself.

In my first letter, May 10, after describing the lawless existence and manner of illegal operations of this trust, I, in part, said:

"It has founded for itself an absolute monopoly. The fact of this is abundantly apparent. The proof may be found. The fact itself affords most positive evidence," italicizing the words "fact" and "proof."

And yet you, in effect, say that I did not expect you to find the proof in the face of such plain language as this. This shows you were totally devoid of candor and fatally bent on mischief.

In my second letter I, in part, said: "In view of the fact, therefore that I had already furnished you with facts and allegations and citations from reliable sources and persons and had given you sources of information where you might gather the evidence that you demanded me to gather for you, I must be permitted to express the most decided opinion that it ought to have given you that 'good reason to believe an offense was being committed which would justify you in setting the machinery of your office in operation to ferret it out,'" concluding my letter with this request:

"Trusting that you may yet have the time before your retirement from office to give this matter your attention and reconsider your determination to escape any action against the tobacco trust by seeking to thrust upon others the duty the law imposes upon you, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, etc."

Whether I wanted you to proceed in court on the testimony I lodged with you or not does not excuse you for not procuring the necessary testimony yourself to show that this complaint is or is not meritorious.

Your unwarrantable assumption of what I wanted done does not excuse you for confining the investigation of this complaint to "such evidence" as "others" and myself should collect and file with your Department; nor does your unwarrantable construction of my language excuse you for mapping out and following a line of procedure whereby this complaint could be dismissed as without merit, because of the insufficiency of the testimony "others" and myself procured and thus filed.

The merits of this and all other similar complaints should be determined upon all the necessary testimony that you, as Attorney-General, could procure to show the absence of merit in the complaint.

I can not bring myself to believe that you indited the second paragraph of your reply seriously. Surely you did not expect to deceive anyone else into believing that I expected you to go to trial on the evidence that I had furnished you. The merest tyro would know that I gave you that in order to show you the sources of proof and to demonstrate to you that strong reason existed to believe that the law is being violated, in order that you might use it as a basis of investigation. You do violence to your own incomparable intelligence when you thus seek to befuddle others.

And that it was extremely unkind of you to thus place me in such ludicrous plight and then proceed to convince yourself that my motives and intelligence are diseased.

It pains me beyond expression to think that my motives and intelligence no longer excite your admiration, but I console myself with the thought that you discovered my shortcomings while under frenzy and that you may think better of me if the tobacco trust succeeds in escaping.

I trust that you will forgive me if I decline to permit you to obscure the issue you have made, either by personal aspersion or evasion or by changing your original statements.

You informed me in your first note that you had "referred it"—my letter of May 10—with its inclosures, to Mr. Abram M. Tillman, United States district attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, with directions to receive any evidence you possess, or that may be submitted by you or others, tending to show a violation of the Federal law relative to restraints on interstate or foreign commerce, and with further directions to report such evidence to me, with his opinion as to its sufficiency to establish a violation of the law.

It is clear from these, your own words, that you had no idea when you wrote this letter of making any investigation yourself, but that the matter was to turn upon what "others" and myself might furnish the district attorney here.

Mr. Tillman was to first determine "its" sufficiency—the evidence—and that however strong and conclusive it may be, it will be held sufficient to justify you in entering upon the inquiry yourself.

The people in the dark-tobacco regions of Tennessee and Kentucky have been rendered almost bankrupt by the oppressions of the trusts in destroying all competition, buying and fixing prices below the cost of production, and they appealed to Congress for relief, coming to Washington in numbers to testify, and such a strong case did they make that the committee favorably reported a bill and the House passed it without opposition. It was this very evidence that convinced the committee and the House which you reject now as insufficient, and it is these people who have been brought to the verge of financial ruin which you invite to assume a function of your own, to perform a duty which the law devolves upon you, and to do it at their own expense when Congress gave you the money and directed you to do this identical thing.

Your action in advancing the merger case on the docket and prevailing in the suits met universal approbation. Your action in failing to advance the beef-trust cases deserves an equal mood of condemnation. Why should not this trust be brought to account? The exorbitant prices exacted for beef to-day can not fall to be known to you. And now your action in refusing to investigate the evidence offered you against the tobacco trust, after your announcement of renunciation to all the trusts that you did not intend to run "amuck," throws suspicion on your only seemingly meritorious action and makes it seem like the railroads entering into the merger were, like a sop to Cerberus, sacrifices to temporarily appease the people on the eve of election.

Your own report of January 13, 1904, of expenditures is interesting, principally as affording a panoramic view of your waning efforts and diminishing enthusiasm against the trusts. You spent $25,985.06 of the half million voted you, $15,011.08 of which went to salaries for your new aids, $10,823.40 expended in the merger theatricals and $127.73 "investigating the beef trust." That $127.73, I dare assert, will not repay the extortions of the beef trust for any one day within the past two weeks in the block in which you reside in Washington. But your much-applauded and exploited enthusiasm has dwindled even beyond that and gone into total and final eclipse, as you celebrate your retirement by a refusal to expend a cent looking after the tobacco trust.

Trusting that you may have the time before your retirement from office to give this matter your attention and reconsider your determination to escape any action against the tobacco trust by seeking to thrust upon others a duty the law imposes upon you, I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. GAINES.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Appealing in vain to Attorney-General Knox, I wrote the following letter appealing to the people to aid me:

OFFICE OF JOHN W. GAINES, M. C.,
Nashville, Tenn., July 29, 1904.

DEAR SIR: The Attorney-General of the United States, responding to my complaint made to him May 10, last, that the "tobacco trust" had conspired unlawfully to restrain and monopolize interstate and foreign trade and commerce in tobacco and control prices, to the great injury of tobacco growers, and suggesting that he "cause proper action to be instituted in the courts, civil and criminal, to dissolve the trust, to enjoin its operations, and to punish the individuals who are so flagrantly and contemptuously defying the law," invited me "and others" to lay such facts and circumstances as would tend to substantiate the charges, which come within my knowledge or the knowledge of any of our people, before the district attorney at Nashville, that it may be determined whether or not the powers of the courts could be invoked as suggested.

Thereupon a mass meeting of tobacco growers was called and assembled at Springfield, Tenn., early in June, where the matter was considered, resulting in the creation of an "evidence committee," the chairman of which is Mr. Felix G. Ewing, Glenraven, Robertson County, Tenn., with instructions to investigate and ascertain as nearly as practicable what proof exists and can be adduced in court tending to show that a combination or agreement exists between any of the several tobacco companies that buy tobacco in this country, how far and in what respect it attempts to restrain such trade and commerce in tobacco, monopolize buying, and control prices.

The committee must know the facts and circumstances exactly as they can be sworn to, in order that the persons knowing the same may be called to testify to them in court. It is not assumed that any of our people know of their own knowledge that such agreements were made. None of us were present or parties to it, and of course we can not swear to it, but all of us may know facts and circumstances clearly pointing to and indicating such an agreement and which will constitute circumstantial evidence of its existence. The fact that such an agreement was made is predicated on evidence we are trying to secure, in addition to other data tending to show, or actually showing, that the tobacco buyers are acting under such agreement and not in competition.

Conspiracies are rarely established by direct proof of the agreement, but the very strongest evidence is always found in the subsequent actions of the parties.

The Attorney-General having thrown upon me the burden of discovering the proof and the persons who know the circumstantial facts that go to prove an unlawful combination, and invited me "and others" (meaning you) to furnish the same to the district attorney at Nashville, I have decided to comply with that invitation in conjunction with the evidence committee by asking you to furnish its chairman (Mr. Ewing) with such facts as you may know, by responding to the following questions as far as you can, stating only such things as you would be willing, if called upon, to swear to in court:

1. Name the tobacco companies, firms, agents, or persons who were the principal buyers of tobacco raised in your vicinity previous to 1902.
2. Name the companies, etc., now buying that tobacco.
3. Is there now competition in buying; and if not, when did it cease?
4. Did competitive buyers visit your neighborhood or your county towns previous to 1902, and do they do so now?
5. Has the change affected prices, and how?
6. What restrictions or restraints are now placed by buyers upon trade and commerce in tobacco?
7. For what market is your tobacco bought?
8. Were there competitive buyers from that market previous to 1902, and is there competition now? State fully in detail.
9. State specifically who and how many companies, firms, agents, or persons used to buy your tobacco, who and how many of them are now buying, and when any of them quit buying.
10. Have you ever heard any agent of buyers or companies make any statement about an agreement between tobacco companies? If so, state who, and when, and what he said.
11. State several different circumstances coming within your knowledge relating to your own sales, or to sales by your neighbors or others, in which it appeared that competition had been eliminated. Give several incidents of this kind.
12. State any fact of any nature coming within your knowledge tending to show that an agreement exists between buyers, that competition has been done away with, or that any restraint has been placed upon the sale of tobacco for shipment to another State or abroad.
13. State fully the manner of selling previous to 1902, and the manner of selling now, and what effect it has had upon prices and an open market, and how and in what respect it has limited or placed restraint upon trade and commerce in tobacco.

Please respond categorically, numbering your responses to conform to the questions. Be concise and clear, giving facts, writing plainly, and attach it to this and mail it to Mr. Ewing as early as practicable. Please reply to every question. They may seem to be repetitions, but each has its separate purpose and importance. It is very much hoped and desired that you take a lively interest in this matter and that you will not fail to respond because others are doing so. We want to make a convincing and a convicting case.

Very truly, yours,

JNO. W. GAINES.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

For expressage, fuel, books and blanks, stationery, advertising, furniture and interior fittings for general storehouses and pay offices in navy-yards; coffee mills and repairs thereto; expenses of naval clothing factory and machinery for same, postage, telegrams, telephones, tolls, ferriages, yeoman's stores, safes, newspapers, ice, and other incidental expenses, $10,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert the following after line 2, page 36:

"The Auditor for the Navy Department is hereby authorized and directed to credit in the settlement of accounts of Paymaster Herbert E. Stevens the sum of $2,760.88, being the value of clothing and small stores stolen from him by Chief Yeoman Oscar S. Kelly, United States Navy, and which had been charged against his account on the books of the Treasury Department."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ and pay, during the fiscal year 1909, out of the lump appropriations of the several bureaus of the Navy Department, such classified civil-service employees as may be necessary to properly perform the clerical, drafting, inspection, messenger, and other classified work at the several navy-yards and stations: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall submit to Congress detailed estimates for all such classified civil-service employees that may be required to be employed during the fiscal year 1910, and annually thereafter, and no such classified civil-service employees shall be employed during the fiscal year 1910, or in any subsequent fiscal year, and paid from such lump appropriations except under specific authorization granted by law from year to year based upon estimates as herein required.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I see that you provide that hereafter there shall be specific estimates submitted for the ensuing fiscal year. Has it been the practice heretofore to appropriate lump sums and permit it to be allotted and expended?

Mr. TAWNEY. At the present time there are between twenty-five and twenty-eight hundred classified naval employees in the various navy yards, all of whom are paid out of lump-sum appropriations. A similar provision to this was carried in the general deficiency bill at the last session.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was it done?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was done. They are paid out of lump sums during this year, but the Department was required to submit a detailed statement of the number of people and the salaries paid to each out of these lump sums, with the hope that the Committee on Naval Affairs would take the matter up and provide specifically for these people as we provide specifically for the employees in the classified service of the various Departments at Washington. This was not done. At that time it was supposed that this was a permanent law, but the Naval Committee were not certain, so they repeated the same provision in their bill this year for the next fiscal year, but a point of order being made in the House, it went out and was not inserted in the Senate.

Now, the Department is somewhat at sea to know whether they can, during the next fiscal year, pay the classified employees out of these lump-sum appropriations. They asked us to insert that authority again, and we coupled with it the proviso that they should submit detailed estimates for these people, and then the Committee on Naval Affairs can recommend specific appropriation in the next naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I sincerely hope that the provision will become permanent law, and that they will be compelled to estimate for them in detail.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITOL BUILDING AND REPAIRS.

The unexpended balances of the appropriations of the fiscal years 1907, and 1907 and 1908, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1908, for payment of the items disallowed and suspended by the Auditor for the Interior Department against the appropriation Capitol building and repairs, 1907 and 1908, amounting to $2,005.91, and for work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol, flagstaves, balyards and tackle, wages of mechanics and laborers, purchase, maintenance, and driving of office vehicle, and not exceeding $100 for the purchase of technical and necessary reference books.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 40, line 12, I find the following language:

Unexpended balances of the appropriations of the fiscal years 1907, and 1907 and 1908, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1908.

How much does that amount to?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not state to the gentleman the exact amount of this balance. It is something between $7,500 and $8,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is practically an appropriation in addition to the appropriation made in the lines just above.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. But there are two appropriations made in the year 1907, and there is a balance in each appropriation, and that is the reason that the words "nineteen hundred and seven" are repeated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is the only instance of any of the Departments having any money left over?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, that would be pretty hard to answer. The matter of having money left over may be rare, nevertheless it sometimes occurs, and I would not want to say whether it is the only instance or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think they ought to have a medal. The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Potomac Electric and Power Company for furnishing electric current for House Office Building for the months of January, February, March, and April, and for estimated sum required for electric current for the months of May and June, 1908, $15,130.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask another question. I want to know if we did not have a bill offered here not long ago to authorize some one company to light all of the public buildings in the city of Washington?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say that we proceeded as far as we could. We reported a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract for that purpose, but it was not in accord with the rules of the House, and it went out on a point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would it have effected a saving for the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. Unquestionably it would have.

Mr. SLAYDEN. An important one?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legislative.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 51, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House, borne on the annual and session rolls, on the 1st day of May, 1908, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the first session of the Sixtyeth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay L. W. Busbey for services as clerk of the Committee on Rules, $1,000.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order to this paragraph which has just been read. The paragraph is to pay L. W. Busbey for services as clerk of the Committee on Rules $1,000. Mr. Chairman, it is undoubtedly true that Mr. Busbey is a very efficient secretary to the Speaker. He adds to that office, an office which is the second perhaps in the United States, a dignity which has always been considered to accompany it, and if it is ever lacking it is supplied on those occasions by the Speaker's secretary, but the Speaker's secretary is paid $4,000 a year for his services. If his services are not sufficiently paid by $4,000, then I should be perfectly willing to consider favorably a proposition to increase them, but I do object to increasing salaries indirectly in this manner. Everybody knows that the clerk—

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would state that this is not an increase of salary by indirection. The gentleman referred to serves in two capacities, as clerk or secretary of the Speaker, and also as clerk to the Committee on Rules, and for twenty years at least the Congress has appropriated this amount to pay the services of the clerk of the Committee on Rules, and there has never been any question about it being for the purpose of increasing his salary as secretary of the Speaker. It is to compensate him for his services which he has actually rendered to the committee.

Mr. GRANGER. Will the gentleman say that he considers the services rendered by Mr. Busbey as clerk to the Committee on Rules are worth $1,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not passing judgment on the value of his services, but I will answer the gentleman by saying that, in my judgment, as clerk of the Committee on Rules Mr. Busbey's services are worth more than are the services of half of the clerks to the committees in this House.

Mr. GRANGER. That is not the point here.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GRANGER. I can not yield to the gentleman. I asked the gentleman from Minnesota if he considered Mr. Busbey's services were worth $1,000 a year. The gentleman from Minnesota is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Does he mean to say that he is coming here and recommending the salary of a clerk when he is not willing to stand up and say that the services of the clerk are worth that salary? I should like to have the gentleman tell us how many times the Committee on Rules has met during the year, whether it has met ten times, whether the clerk's services are worth $100 each time, whether they have had hearings which have required the services of a clerk. I should like to have him tell us what the services are which Mr. Busbey has performed.

If $4,000 is not enough for Mr. Busbey, I am perfectly willing to vote for $5,000 if the gentleman from Minnesota will say that is the proper sum he should receive. But the Committee on Rules, Mr. Chairman, it is to be remembered, have been relieved from a large portion of their work at the present session of Congress by the action of the majority in suspending all rules, so it is not necessary for the Committee on Rules to even meet to bring in a rule here. I should be glad, Mr. Chairman, to have the gentleman tell us why he considers Mr. Busbey is deserving of this money.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; did he address a question to me?

Mr. GRANGER. I simply asked the question, Mr. Chairman, in fact, I asked several questions of the gentleman—why he brought in a recommendation for a salary here which he, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, did not consider proper?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended this not only because they think the service was worth the amount provided, but also because for twenty years the House, or the Committee on Appropriations, has made a similar recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota say whether or not there is any law or resolution fixing this amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the Chair that the Committee on Rules is authorized by the rules of the House, the same as every other committee is, and one of the incidental services to a committee is that of the clerks to every committee of the House. There is no specific law authorizing the appointment of clerks to any committee of the House. There may be a resolution brought in here authorizing the appointment of clerks to some committee during the session, but the clerks are provided for and are a necessary part of a committee in order to enable the committee to perform properly its work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, in the absence of any law or in the absence of any resolution—

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted just a moment, I want to ask my friend from Rhode Island to withdraw his point of order and not subject the Chair to the possible embarrassment of ruling upon it. And if I am permitted one moment to say to him as a member of the Committee on Rules that Mr. Busbey does render material and valuable services to the committee; that we have had more than ten meetings during this Congress, and that we have had hearings; that Mr. Busbey does prepare the reports of that committee, and that I think, as a member of that committee, $1,000 is not at all excessive compensation for the services he renders to the committee, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Rhode Island, in view of these facts, will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Disregarding the personality of Mr. Busbey, who is an exceptionally capable man, does the gentleman believe that the labors comprehended in that position justify the appropriation of a thousand dollars a year?

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that the services of a man capable of filling the position at all times are fully worth $1,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. To the committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. To the committee; I do. There are times in certain periods of certain Congresses when the incumbent of the position does not of necessity devote a considerable portion of his time to this work. There are other times when he must devote a very considerable portion of his time, and I think when you consider that and consider the ability that a man must possess to properly fill that position, that this compensation is very moderate. Will the gentleman from Rhode Island listen to my appeal; will he give answer to my appeal? I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. GRANGER. Well, Mr. Chairman, so long as the gentleman from New York, a member of the Committee on Rules, has stated that in his opinion Mr. Busbey earns the salary which is paid to him here, I am willing to withdraw the point of order. I could not do so as long as the chairman of the committee could not answer me. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay William Tyler Page for compiling, indexing, and preparing for publication all labor legislation by Congress, Executive orders, decisions, and all matter pertinent thereto, $2,500, and of said work 6,000 copies shall be printed, 2,000 for the use of the Senate and 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order on this paragraph. There can be no question but what this is new legislation. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, as I understand it, to whom this money is to be paid, and I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to correct me if I am wrong, is already a clerk to a committee in this House, is clerk to the Committee, I am informed, on Accounts. Am I right?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is right.

Mr. GRANGER. I am also informed, Mr. Chairman, that he is clerk to a Member of this House. I know that he has sufficient time, Mr. Chairman, to join the ranks of the Republican spellbinders and to go far from his home in Maryland, which I have no doubt is a very delightful one, and come up to the cold and rocky State in which I live, and there, Mr. Chairman—I will not say with what success, that speaks for itself for I am still a Member of this House—to carry on the work of a spellbinder. I do not speak with any feeling against the gentleman on that account, Mr. Chairman, because I am glad to say that the year in which Mr. Page, clerk of the Committee on Accounts of this House, saw fit, as an employee of this House, to go out of his district and into another State while he was in the employment of this House, receiving pay which the Members of this House voted him, to go on the stump in opposition to the reelection of a Member of this House—

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. GRANGER. That is not the reason I made the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. GRANGER. Will you not allow me to finish my sentence?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. GRANGER. Well, I will make the point of order; and there is no question about the paragraph being subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GRANGER. It is for compiling, indexing, and preparing for publication certain legislation by Congress, Executive orders and decisions, and so forth.

It does not say decisions of what. It is most loosely drawn.

Does the Chair desire any further argument on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the fiscal year 1908, including a sufficient sum to pay the Acting Public Printer the difference between his salary and the salary of the Public Printer from the date of suspension of the Public Printer to the date of the qualification of his successor, and to reimburse him the amount he paid for his bond as Acting Public Printer, $500,000.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out of line 15 on page 66 the words "five hundred thousand dollars." I will ask if that is not a misprint or error. I do not understand why $500,000 should be necessary for the purposes mentioned in this section.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is for a deficiency of $500,000 in the appropriations for public printing and binding; and out of that the Acting Public Printer, who is the Deputy Public Printer, and who has for several months been and will have to continue for several months to serve as Acting Public Printer, to receive the same rate of compensation as the Public Printer, which is $5,000 a year.

Mr. FINLEY. But it says $500,000. I understand now that it was necessary for all the preceding items.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is for all the preceding items of deficiency for public printing.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he can give the House any information as to why there has to be a deficiency of over $500,000 for the Printing Office.

Mr. TAWNEY. I stated in the beginning of the reading of the bill that the deficiency arises out of the fact that the estimates for expenditures of the Printing Office during this fiscal year were much less than they ought to have been.

Mr. PERKINS. Were they less than they ought to have been, or were they less than the amount that was spent by the Public Printer?

Mr. TAWNEY. The estimates were less than they should have been.

Mr. PERKINS. Why does the gentleman think that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because the amount of work that has been done during the year and the cost of that work has been in excess of what they estimated it would be, both as to the amount and as to the cost.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you know whether it is not in large part due to the fact that the purchase of material of several sorts ran up several hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. TAWNEY. There has been an increase in the price of all materials used by the Public Printer.

Mr. PERKINS. But the purchases made were very much larger than anyone supposed would be made.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's committee has made an investigation of that matter, and he knows more about it than I do. Our information, given by the present Acting Public Printer, is to the effect that the deficiency is not due to any excess of price over the best market price for these various articles covered in this item.

Mr. PERKINS. All I desire to say to the chairman of the committee is that we shall certainly endeavor at the next session to obtain legislation which will very largely increase the control of the Committee on Printing over the Printing Office, and I believe that if such legislation—I hope the gentleman will not oppose it—is passed, there will not be a necessity for a deficiency of $700,000 in the Printing Office.

Mr. LANDIS. I move to strike out the last two words. I would say, referring to the statement just made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I do not think that the fact that this deficiency is called for is due to the fact that the appropriations made for this fiscal year were less than the estimates submitted for the last fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say that the appropriations were less. I stated that the estimates were not what was required. They submitted estimates too low. We appropriated all they estimated.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes. And it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this would be a good time to call the attention of the committee to the excess of expenditures over the estimates made by the Public Printer. For instance, in 1907 the estimates submitted by the Public Printer for presses, composing and other machinery, was $90,000. The total expenditures, including miscellaneous plant items, were $388,000. The estimates submitted by the Public Printer for the year 1908 for machinery, type, tools, and implements was $90,000—for the year.

But the first six months he spent for presses, composing and other machinery, and miscellaneous plant items $498,373.64. In other words, the total estimates for three fiscal years were $370,000 and the total expenditures, aside from miscellaneous plant items for the two and a half years, were $998,349.82, and including miscellaneous plant items $1,234,189. It strikes me that the time is about ripe for the Government Printing Office to be held to its estimates and not permitted to run in excess, as they have been running during past years. Congress should appropriate for these expenditures in the same manner that it appropriates for other Government expenditures, and not permit expenditures for machinery from appropriations based on estimates for other purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman referring now to the Printing Office or is he referring to the estimates submitted for printing by the various Departments?

Mr. LANDIS. I am referring to the estimates submitted by the Public Printer.

Mr. TAWNEY. He does not estimate for the Departments, and in nearly all the Department appropriations for printing this year there is a deficiency, owing to the increased cost of printing, as they say.

Mr. PERKINS. The Public Printer estimates for machinery; the gentleman from Indiana is right.

Mr. LANDIS. These estimates are for presses, composing and other machinery, and miscellaneous plant items. This does not include the item to which the gentleman from Minnesota refers at all. This includes the machinery, the miscellaneous plant items installed in the Government Printing Office, and shows an excess of actual expenditures over the estimates submitted that is simply riotous in the aggregate.

I would say that as the law now stands there is no check whatever on the Public Printer in the matter of expenditures along this line. He is under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing in the matter of purchasing paper, for which annual bids are submitted and contracts awarded. But in the matter of expenditures of this character he can to-night between the hours of half past 9 and half past 10 o'clock, expend from $275,000 to $500,000 for typesetting machinery and other fixtures in the Government Printing Office. He can even go further; he can bind the Government, if he sees fit, in a contract for machinery to the entire amount of his appropriation made for wages, paper, and other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's committee has jurisdiction of legislation affecting the Printing Office. Why does it not, after the investigation he has made, recommend some legislation to Congress and have it enacted?

Mr. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Committee on Printing has investigated it, and that in my short career I never have faced as many complex problems as there seem to be in the Government Printing Office. We have made great headway. We feel that the legislation that we have recommended, in fact, we know, has resulted in great saving to the Government. For instance, by the operation of the two joint resolutions which we had enacted into law, known as "resolution No. 13" and "resolution No. 14," in the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, the total number of pages saved by printing in editions instead of printing the full number amounted last year to 279,598,837, equivalent to 511,197 volumes of 500 pages each, and which but for the operation of these joint resolutions would have been printed and piled up in the warehouses of the Government.

On five items alone, including the bound edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Yearbook, the publications of the Geological Survey, the education report, the Abridgment of Messages and Documents, we saved an amount in dollars and cents equal to $140,936.41. The bound edition of the RECORD for both sessions of the Fifty-ninth Congress were printed in the same fiscal year. These copies heretofore had been printed for Senators and Members who did not call for them, and they are on storage in the warehouses. That printing has been cut off, and in these five publications alone there has been saved during the last fiscal year, as I say, over $140,000.

Of the publications specifically authorized by law and those printed by authority of joint and concurrent resolutions, there were in 1905, 1,431,943,264 printed pages; there were in 1907, 1,162,717,779 printed pages, a reduction of 379,235,485 printed pages, the equivalent of over 758,000 volumes of 500 pages each.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My suggestion was that, having some knowledge of the work, the gentleman's committee should have been continued and recommendations made to remedy some of the other abuses that are apparent to his committee. The Committee on Appropriations can not attempt to do that; it can only appropriate for the service that is imperative.

Mr. LANDIS. I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota meant it, the other day, when he stated, in answer to an interrogatory propounded to him, that this had been a very expensive Commission, because, as a matter of fact, the expenses of this Commission that has brought about all this saving has been less than $10,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say that I was not criticising the gentleman's Commission.

Mr. LANDIS. No; but I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota meant it the other day. He is entirely in error in that, because—

Mr. TAWNEY. Where did I make that statement?

Mr. LANDIS. In the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. Somebody put it in without my authority. I never uttered it.

Mr. LANDIS. I was surprised when I saw it, because the total expense of the Commission, which extended over two years was less than $10,000.

Mr. PERKINS. In corroboration of what the gentleman from Minnesota states, I want to say that the running debate was in reference to an amendment offered by myself, and there was no statement by the gentleman from Minnesota reflecting on the Printing Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the Printing Commission has not been in my mind this session of Congress.

Mr. LANDIS. I certainly must have misread the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman must have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question or two. How long has this abuse in the way of the purchase of machinery been going on in the Printing Office?

Mr. LANDIS. I will say that as far back as we have gone there has never been any check on the Public Printer in the matter of purchasing machinery.

Mr. SHERLEY. How far have the abuses gone; how many years?

Mr. LANDIS. I do not think there has ever been any check on the Public Printer in the way of purchasing machinery.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am asking how far there has been an abuse in the purchase of machinery?

Mr. LANDIS. I could not say. I am not saying now that there has been an abuse, but I am saying that the estimates that have been submitted have been exceeded by the expenditures to a degree that certainly should call the attention of this House to what to me seems to be an abuse.

Mr. SHERLEY. How long has this Joint Commission been in existence?

Mr. TAWNEY. About four years.

Mr. LANDIS. About two years and a half.

Mr. SHERLEY. Prior to that did not the committees of the House and Senate have charge—have jurisdiction—of this matter?

Mr. LANDIS. They have only the jurisdiction so far as purchasing paper goes.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have jurisdiction in regard to legislating with reference to the matter.

Mr. LANDIS. I presume they have.

Mr. SHERLEY. And did nothing. I am trying to fix the responsibility. The gentleman has made some very serious statements, and I want to find out what committee has been "soldiering" and not working.

Mr. LANDIS. I would say in 1895 there was a revision of the printing laws, and that revision, when originally made and brought into the House, I think, was a very good one, but it was amended in the House and in the Senate, and when it finally was perfected it did not represent the ideas of the printing committee in either branch of Congress, and since that time the printing law has been amended, I presume, by three or four hundred amendments, and it is now a hodge-podge.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was it lack of capacity or lack of labor on the part of the committees having jurisdiction?

Mr. LANDIS. It certainly has not been a lack of either on our part, because we are able to show results, and I would not say anything that would reflect upon my predecessors.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am trying to find out how it comes about that these abuses should have continued so long without any action having been taken.

Mr. LANDIS. I can not understand why there should never have been placed on the Public Printer any check in the matter of purchasing machinery. As far as the other abuse is concerned, the Printing Investigating Commission has corrected that.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman knows, of course, that the practice that has grown up in this Congress of expecting the Committee on Appropriations to not only attend to the duty of appropriating money, but to also be an investigating committee is a very bad one.

Mr. LANDIS. I understand.

Mr. SHERLEY. If all of these committees on expenditures in the various Departments would do something besides simply exist, then the Committee on Appropriations could confine its attention to its legitimate labors.

Mr. LANDIS. I think the gentleman from Kentucky will agree that we have shown pretty fair results for the money that we have expended and the effort put forth.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it is in striking contrast to the lack of results heretofore obtained, and I am just trying to get at which committee did the soldiering and did no work for many years and permitted this abuse to grow up.

Mr. LANDIS. They seemed to pay no attention to it at all, and I must say that the Committee on Appropriations has given us everything that we have asked, and we hope by continuing the good work to bring about results in the matter of expenditures for machinery as will harmonize with the results we have brought about in regard to excess printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

For equipment of vessels, Bureau of Equipment, $963.71.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, end of line 16, add:

"For payment of certain claims approved by the Auditor of the War Department for damages done to private property by the firing of heavy guns at Forts Heath and Banks, Winthrop, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $1,250."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inland mail transportation, star, fiscal year 1906, $40.17.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to the post-office item, page 51, for the purpose of offering an amendment at the end of line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 51 for the purpose of offering an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, after line 15, insert:

"To close the account of the Doremus Machine Company for canceling machines furnished during the fiscal year 1903, $26,950: Provided, That said sum shall be accepted by said company in full of all claim and demand against the United States arising under their contract with the United States, dated May 6, 1902."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object until we know what this is.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in explanation, that this item was submitted at the last session of this Congress and again submitted at this session. At the last Congress there was a controversy between the company and the Post-Office Department as to the amount. Now, it is claimed by the Post-Office Department that the amount was $26,950, while the machine company has been claiming that the amount was $36,000. This obligation grows out of a contract, the date of which is referred to in the amendment. It is not a claim. It is a contract obligation, and is for the purpose of closing the account. A year ago, when this claim was considered, the company refused to accept the amount the Post-Office Department was willing to pay, and the committee then took the position that until the Post-Office Department and the company reached a mutual conclusion as to the amount necessary to satisfy the obligation under the contract we would not bother with it nor would we appropriate for part payment.

When the matter was considered only a few days ago we had no more information than we had a year ago regarding the attitude of the company. Since the bill was reported, and it was ascertained that this item was not in the bill as it was estimated for by the Department, they inquired as to the reason, and I frankly said it was because there was no evidence before the committee that the amount had been agreed upon or that the amount estimated for would be accepted in full payment, and we did not propose to recommend to the House an appropriation for the payment of the balance until the company should agree to accept that balance in full payment of the contract obligation. That agreement has now been reached, as I am informed by the Department, and I have incorporated in the amendment the date of the contract and that this payment shall be in full settlement of all claim and it can not be made unless the amount appropriated is so accepted.

Mr. FINLEY. It is not true in this account of the Post-Office Department with the Doremus Company that there were charges of fraud against them to a considerable extent?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. And that was the occasion of the delay in settlement?

Mr. TAWNEY. There was some delay on account of litigation growing out of the charge of conspiracy which was made against certain employees of the Post-Office Department and certain officers of this company. The charge of conspiracy and fraud was tried and the officers of the company were acquitted. There is no question that even if a suit were brought in the Court of Claims and the contract was held to be invalid because it was made in fraud that they would be entitled to recover the reasonable value of the property which they furnished under the contract, and that is the amount which the Department has estimated.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand it, this amendment is offered to pay these people on the basis of quantum meruit; you do not base it strictly upon the settlement of the contract.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is based on a contract liability. I will say to the gentleman that it is the judgment of the legal officials of the Post-Office Department that there is a contract liability. But in view of what has transpired, the Department summarily and arbitrarily refused to pay the contract price for these machines, and the company has refused to accept the amount which the Department was willing to give until the last few months.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the company now agreed to accept this amount?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and the language of the amendment is such that they can not receive any of it until they shall entirely discharge the Government from any liability under the contract.

Mr. FINLEY. If the Post-Office officials are entirely satisfied and agree that this is the proper sum, I do not desire to say anything further.

Mr. TAWNEY. They recommend this amount. They recommended it before, and we did not put it in the bill because we had no evidence before us to show that they were willing to accept this amount. We refused to make the appropriation because there was no agreement between the parties that the amount would be accepted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the Department made a written statement assuming the responsibility for this, that the company is willing to accept this money, or has some subordinate up there simply done it?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the Post-Office Department a day or two after this amendment came in were notified by the company that it would accept the amount recommended by the Department in full settlement of their rights under the contract. In submitting this estimate on February 1 the First Assistant Postmaster-General, making a recommendation of $26,950, does not say anything at all about the company agreeing to accept this amount, and for that reason we did not include this item in the bill. Since that time the company has expressed its willingness to accept this amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman again, has some responsible official stated in writing that the company is willing to accept that amount, or is the communication from some irresponsible official?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that this comes to me from the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], who has been in communication with the officers of the company; and one of the officers of the company is now here, and he informs me that the company notified the Post-Office Department in writing several weeks ago that they would accept the sum. The Department has not submitted any communication showing that the company would accept this amount in full settlement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Post-Office Department should assume the responsibility, and not ask Congress to do it upon a mere statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department has assumed the responsibility in making the recommendation. On two occasions it has submitted an estimate for an appropriation, but Congress declined to make it because of the peculiar circumstances surrounding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It seems to me it is the duty of the Department, at this time, to furnish the information that would justify Members of the House in recommending this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. Is this one of those things interdicted after the provision that you put in the statutes some time ago?

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a contract obligation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What right have they to make a contract obligation in excess of the appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. They did not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How, then, do you happen to have it in the deficiency bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a deficiency which arises out of the fact that the appropriation was made to pay for the machines, and the machines not having been paid for the amount appropriated has been turned back in the Treasury. Now, this is to settle with the parties under that contract.

Mr. KEIFER. I will ask if it is not provided by the amendment that this amount will not be paid unless the payment is accepted in full and a receipt given for it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. Whether they are willing to do it or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. They can not get the money until they receipt in full for it and release the Government from any and all obligation under the contract.

Mr. HARRISON. Is this the same thing for which money was appropriated in the appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department had an appropriation out of which they could purchase these machines. It was not appropriated specifically for this company.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think the gentleman understood the question. Did not we appropriate this year in the post-office appropriation bill a quarter of a million dollars for the payment of rent for the canceling machines?

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be, but that is not this case.

Mr. HARRISON. Is this the same company?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Are these canceling machines?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are canceling machines.

Mr. HARRISON. Why should we appropriate for two companies for the same machine?

Mr. DWIGHT. This appropriation is for machines purchased in 1902, which have not been settled for owing to a suit over the claim.

Mr. HARRISON. The contract has lapsed?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the appropriation has lapsed.

Mr. HARRISON. Why should we appropriate for two companies; what is the purpose of it?

Mr. TAWNEY. We are not buying machines from two companies, we are not appropriating specifically for companies. This is a balance due them under their contract, which was made in pursuance of law.

Mr. HARRISON. Have we stopped buying machines from this company?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is not this the situation: The appropriation in the post-office bill for this year is for use in the next fiscal year, and this is an appropriation to pay a debt that was contracted six years ago. There is no lapse or duplication of the appropriation at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Minnesota for unanimous consent to return to page 51.

Mr. TAWNEY. My amendment is offered on page 51.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee determined to rise, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21946, the general deficiency bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS FROM LANDS OF ALLOTTEES OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HON. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Will you please relieve me from service as conferee on H. R. 15641?

Thanking you for the compliment of the designation and with personal regard, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. L. KNAPP.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MCGUIRE to fill the vacancy.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Frank Z. Curry, H. R. 2395, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, agree to the amendments to the general deficiency appropriation bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules, agree to the amendments to the general deficiency appropriation bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pass the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 204, nays 25, answered "present" 13, not voting 145, as follows:

By unanimous consent, granted to Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, reference of the bill (S. 6529) for the relief of Mary S. Ferguson was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

MAKING MONTEREY AND PORT HARFORD, CAL., SUBPORTS OF ENTRY.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (S. 3153) to make Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, subports of entry, and for other purposes, and to pass the same with House amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, are hereby made subports of entry in the district of San Francisco, and the necessary customs officers may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be stationed at each of said subports with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services as, in his judgment, the interest of commerce may require, and said officers shall receive such compensation as he may allow.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, from time to time, as subports of entry other places within the said district, at which customs officers may be stationed or detailed for the purposes set forth in the preceding section, and at such compensation as he may allow.

SEC. 3. That in lieu of stationing deputy collectors or other customs officers permanently at any subport in said district, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, authorize the necessary officers to be detailed from time to time, from the port of entry, or from another subport within such district to enter or clear vessels, receive duties, fees, or other moneys, and perform such other services as, in his judgment, the interests of commerce may require.

SEC. 4. That the act approved February 24, 1906, entitled "An act to allow the entry and clearance of vessels at San Luis Obispo, Port Harford, and Monterey, Cal.," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Port Arthur, in the State of Texas.

SEC. 5. That Petosky, in the State of Michigan, is hereby made a subport of entry in the district of Grand Rapids, and the necessary customs officers may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be stationed at said subport with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive merchandise-shipped in bond, collect duties and make delivery of same, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other service as, in his judgment, the interest of commerce may require, and said officers shall receive such compensation as he may allow.

SEC. 6. That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the support of Petosky, in the State of Michigan.

SEC. 7. That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the support of St. Vincent, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, is this a unanimous-consent proposition?

The SPEAKER. This is a request for unanimous consent to consider and pass the bill. The unanimous consent would agree to the House amendments to the Senate bill and pass the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from California to yield me five minutes.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Five minutes are pretty precious. Would the gentleman be satisfied to give the unanimous consent, coupled with the request that he be allowed to address the House for five minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I am not going to object to this bill if I am given the five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman puts it that he gives unanimous consent and asks consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed for five minutes after unanimous consent is granted to pass the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I do not take it in that way.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from California to yield me five minutes. I said I would not object to his bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has not five minutes to yield.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Did I hear the name of Port Arthur, Tex., read out in the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. But there is nothing for the gentleman to address the House about. If there is unanimous consent that the bill shall be passed at the end of the five minutes, then we have something before us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state this: I have something to say about the bill. It comes from the committee that I am on, and I have something to say in reference to it. If I object, then the gentleman will move to suspend the rules, and it will take twenty minutes' debate on a side beside a roll call.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I think, under these circumstances that I am entitled to make a statement in reference to this matter before it is passed. I ask the House, then, to allow me to make a statement in reference to this bill, not to exceed five minutes. Anything can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; anything can be done by unanimous consent, and the Chair is willing to recognize the gentleman from New York to ask at the end of five minutes, which the gentleman asks by unanimous consent, that the bill be considered as passed with the House amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought, Mr. Speaker, you were going to pass the bill before I made my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to announce it afterwards. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, with this remarkable showing of good humor and courtesy on the part of the Speaker, I will accept the proposition. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House with a speech, but I wish merely to call the attention of the House again to the fact that we are continually passing these bills providing for new ports, new collection districts, new I. T. ports, increasing the cost of collecting the revenues of this country that is far in excess of any other country, far in excess of what it costs to-day to collect the internal revenue, and that no effort is being made in this House to reduce the cost of the collection of the customs of this country.

Although I believe these bills are good—I have no objection to these bills, but I do insist that the time has come when this country should take up this whole matter and overhaul it and cut out the unnecessary expenditures before you continue increasing the cost of collecting the customs revenues.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say I came to that conclusion two years ago, and I tried to pass a bill and could not succeed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My remarks, I will say to the chairman of the committee, were addressed to the House, and not to the Committee on Appropriations. I, however, think it is the duty of the chairman of that committee to make another effort to get this House to revise these customs-collection laws.

So the bill as amended was passed.

AMENDING SECTION 4896 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 15841.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman desired to ask unanimous consent?

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to concur in the following House bill with a Senate amendment. A vote on this would be, if unanimous consent is given, to pass the House bill with a Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the title of the bill with the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15841) to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask if the Clerk read the part that is amended?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has just read that.

Mr. CHANEY. I did not so understand it.

Mr. SULZER. It is just exactly the same as it passed the House, and the only thing the Senate did—

The SPEAKER. They struck out the House bill entirely after the enacting clause and inserted an amendment. Now, the request of the gentleman is for unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment, which would pass the bill.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say the Senate amendment in no wise changes the House bill. The House bill provides that certain words shall be stricken out of the law and certain other words inserted, so that the section would read as follows, and the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted just exactly the House amendments, without stating what they are, but providing that section so and so shall be amended so as to read as follows.

The SPEAKER. It is the difference only between tweedledum and tweedle-dee. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

So the Senate amendment was agreed to.

AMENDING SECTION 4885 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following House bill and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 17703. An act amending section 4885 of the Revised Statutes.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it ought to be read—

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was read.

The SPEAKER. The amendment seems to be clerical. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was concurred in.

MOVING WASHINGTON STATUE FROM CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. McCALL. I ask unanimous consent to take House joint resolution No. 124 from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am going to object to all the rest. It is 6 o'clock nearly, and supper time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not object to this.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will let him in, and I will let Mr. CLAYTON in, and then I will object to the rest.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have none to offer for myself, but I really ask the gentleman not to object to this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following House joint resolution and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution No. 124, authorizing the presentation of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution.

With a Senate amendment, which was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was concurred in and the title amended.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4341. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin P. Lynn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5412. An act granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 7123. An act granting an increase of pension to Harry S. Lee, formerly Albert Lee Alleman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 90. Joint resolution to amend an act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable waters, and so forth.

MISCELLANEOUS INDIAN BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I send to the desk, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands, or any part thereof, allotted to any Indian, or any inherited interest therein, which can be sold under existing law by authority of the Secretary of the Interior, except the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, may be sold on the petition of the allottee, or his heirs, on such terms and conditions and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the lands of a minor, or of a person deemed incompetent by the Secretary of the Interior to petition for himself, may be sold in the same manner, on the petition of the natural guardian in the case of infants, and in the case of persons deemed incompetent as aforesaid, and of orphans without a natural guardian, on petition of a person designated for the purpose by the Secretary of the Interior. That when any Indian who has heretofore received or who may hereafter receive, an allotment of land dies before the expiration of the trust period, the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain the legal heirs of such Indian, and if satisfied of their ability to manage their own affairs shall cause to be issued in their names a patent in fee simple for said lands; but if he finds them incapable of managing their own affairs, the land may be sold as heretofore provided. And the action of the Secretary of the Interior in determining the legal heirs of any deceased Indian as provided herein shall be conclusive and final for the purpose of passing title to the lands conveyed: Provided, That the proceeds derived from all sales hereunder shall be used, during the trust period, for the benefit of the allottee, or heir, so disposing of his interest, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: And provided further, That upon the approval of any sale hereunder by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause a patent in fee to issue in the name of the purchaser for the lands so sold; and the issuance of such patent shall operate as a cancellation of any trust patent, or patent containing restrictions on alienation, issued in the name of the original allottee. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment, notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitation, for any balances found due, without interest, with the right of appeal as in other cases, upon the claims of H. W. Gilkey, Herman Hankwitz, Herman Hankwitz & Co., W. P. Cook & Bro., M. Westcott, J. A. Liege, assignee of J. F. Gauthier, F. F. Green, traders, against the Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin and against certain members of said tribe at the Green Bay Agency, for supplies, goods, wares, merchandise, tools, and live stock furnished certain members of the said tribe after the 1st day of January, in the year 1880, for the purpose of carrying on logging operations upon the Menominee Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin. Said claims shall be presented to said court by verified petitions to be filed within six months from the date of the approval of this act. Said court shall, in rendering judgment, ascertain and determine the amount, if any, due upon each of said claims and if the court find that there is a liability upon any of said claims it shall then determine if such liability be that of the said Menominee tribe of Indians as a tribe or that of individual members of said tribe, and it shall render judgment for the amount, if any, found due from said tribe to any of said claimants, and it shall render judgment for the amounts, if any, found due from any of the individual members of said tribe to any of said claimants. Upon the rendition of final judgments, the court shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall thereupon, in case judgments be against the said Menominee tribe of Indians as a tribe, direct the payment of said judgments out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said tribe, and who, in case judgments be against individual members of said Menominee tribe of Indians, shall, through the disbursing officers in charge of said Green Bay Agency, pay, from any annuity due or which may become due said Indian as an individual or as the head of a family from the United States or from the share of such Indian as an individual or as the head of a family in any distribution of tribal funds deposited in the Treasury of the United States, the amounts of such judgments to the claimants in whose favor such judgments have been rendered: Provided, That not more than 50 per cent of the annuity due any such Indian as an individual or as the head of a family shall be applied to the payment of such judgments: Provided, however, That if more than one judgment be rendered against any such individual Indian and if 50 per cent of the annuity due such Indian as an individual or as the head of a family be not sufficient to discharge such judgments, such payment shall be made to the claimants in proportion to the amount of their respective judgments: Provided further, That in case 50 per cent of any annuity payment due any such Indian as an individual or as the head of a family be not sufficient to satisfy the judgment or judgments rendered against said Indian, then and in that case 50 per cent of subsequent annuity payments due said Indian as an individual and as the head of a family shall be applied to the payment of said judgments until the same be fully satisfied. The Menominee tribe of Indians, through its business committee, is authorized to employ an attorney or attorneys to defend the interests of said tribe and of the individual members of said tribe in any actions brought under the provisions of this act, the compensation of such attorney or attorneys to be determined by the court, and for which attorneys' fees judgment shall be rendered, and upon its certification to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of said judgment shall be paid to said attorney or attorneys out of any funds standing to the credit of said Menominee tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the heirs of Cornplanter, a Seneca Indian chief, as ascertained by the orphan's court of Warren County, Pa., under act of the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania of May 16, 1871, and their descendants are hereby authorized and empowered to bring suit in the courts of the United States for the recovery of the possession or the quieting of title of any lands granted individually to said Cornplanter, alias John O'Bial or Abeel, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said courts, both in law and in equity, to hear and determine the rights of said Cornplanter under any grant made to him. Any petition filed or other court papers may be verified by the attorneys representing said heirs or their duly authorized attorneys in fact.

SEC. 4. That a lease bearing date September 19, 1907, between the Seneca Nation of Indians on the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, in the State of New York, and Charles M. L. Ashby, of Erie County, N. Y., is hereby ratified and confirmed.

SEC. 5. That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of Samuel Garland, deceased, and to render judgment thereon in such amounts, if any, as may appear to be equitably due. Said judgment, if any, in favor of the heirs of Garland shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, said judgment to be rendered on the principle of quantum meruit for services rendered and expenses incurred. Notice of said suit shall be served on the governor of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall appear and defend in said suit on behalf of said nation.

Sec. 6. That the act of April 30, 1908, reading as follows:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 6, township 28 north, range 24 east of the Indian meridian, Indian Territory, the same having been set apart to the Roman Catholic Church for church and school purposes by the Quapaw national council, on August 24, 1893, and said church having maintained a church and school thereon since that date."

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 6, township 28 north, range 24 east of the Indian meridian, Indian Territory, the same having been set apart to the Roman Catholic Church for church and school purposes by the Quapaw national council, on August 24, 1893, and said church having maintained a church and school thereon since that date."

Sec. 7. That in addition to the towns heretofore segregated, surveyed, and scheduled in accordance with law, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to segregate and survey within that part of the territory of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, State of Oklahoma, heretofore segregated as coal and asphalt land, such other towns, parts of towns, or town lots, as are now in existence, or which he may deem it desirable to establish. He shall cause the surface of the lots in such towns or parts of towns to be appraised, scheduled, and sold at the rates, on the terms, and with the same character of estate as is provided in section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 495), under regulations to be prescribed by him. That the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 137), shall not apply to town lots appraised and sold as provided herein. That all expenses incurred in surveying, platting, and selling the lots in any town or parts of towns shall be paid from the proceeds of the sale of town lots of the nation in which such town is situated.

Sec. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury belonging to the Cherokee tribe of Indians, to those intermarried white citizens of the said Cherokee tribe placed on the final approved rolls of the said Cherokee tribe by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Daniel Red Bird against The United States, the share or shares to which they are entitled in the funds of the Cherokee Nation on account of payments heretofore made out of said Cherokee funds to members of the Cherokee Nation, but in which payments said intermarried white Cherokee citizens did not participate and to which they were entitled in accordance with the findings of the Supreme Court in the said case of Daniel Red Bird against The United States, said intermarried white Cherokee citizens having married into the Cherokee Nation prior to November 1, 1875, and not having since abandoned their citizenship. In case any of said intermarried Cherokee white citizens have died since final enrollment their share or shares in the money distributed shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: Provided, however, That the Cherokee Nation shall have authority to contest before the Secretary of the Interior the right of any person whose enrollment was made under the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Daniel Red Bird to receive such payments, and if said Secretary becomes convinced that such person was improperly enrolled he is hereby authorized to deny him the right to receive such back payments.

Sec. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People, a charitable corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, for and covering the following described lands, amounting to approximately 280 acres, now and for many years occupied by the said Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People, as an Indian school, to wit: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 13, the south half of the northeast quarter of section 14, and the east half of the northwest quarter, and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 24, all in township 26 north, range 30 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, on the Navajo Indian Reservation, in Arizona Territory.

Sec. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell for use for school purposes to school districts of the State of Oklahoma, from the unallotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes, tracts of land not to exceed 2 acres in any one district, at prices and under regulations to be prescribed by him, and proper conveyances of such lands shall be executed in accordance with existing laws regarding the conveyance of tribal property; and the Secretary of the Interior also shall have authority to remove the restrictions on the sale of such lands, not to exceed 2 acres in each case, as allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, including fullbloods and minors, may desire to sell for school purposes.

Sec. 11. That the borough of Carlisle, in the State of Pennsylvania, shall be, and is hereby, granted the right and privileges of laying through and under the land owned by the United States and now used for the purpose of or in connection with the United States Indian Industrial School, such pipe or pipes as may be necessary for use in connection with or as part of its sewage system, said pipe or pipes to be laid beneath the surface of the ground, except as to the necessary manholes, and so laid as not to interfere with the use or mar the appearance of the premises: Provided, That no pipe or pipes shall be laid in pursuance of authority hereby conferred until the plan showing the location thereof shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and his agreement to pay a fair proportion of the expense, the sewage system, disposal plant, and pipes constructed, or to be constructed, by the borough of Carlisle shall be of sufficient size to take care of the sewage of the United States Indian Industrial School, which shall be permitted to establish a connection with the said sewage system and use the same.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a privileged observation here. It is hot and sultry, the Hall is crowded with Members, every door in the galleries is shut up tight, and we are almost stifled in here for lack of fresh air. I do insist that we make some better arrangements hereafter than we have at the present time.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules a second is considered as ordered. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes—

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdraw the demand for a second.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand a second. This is an important bill, and we ought to know something about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the demand for a second and the gentleman from New York renews the demand. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will not take twenty minutes. This is a so-called "omnibus bill." Its various sections are made up of bills which have been favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, save two sections. There are none of the sections which create any charge whatever upon the Treasury. There are two sections that have not been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. One of them is the section which corrects a description contained in the Indian appropriation bill, providing for the issuance of a patent to a society which maintains a training school. In the Indian appropriation bill a quarter section was described as "southeast," when it should have been "southwest." This is a correction of that. The other section which has not been reported by the Indian Committee is one giving to the city of Carlisle, Pa., the right to lay a sewer across the Indian school grounds at Carlisle, under certain conditions, which shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

As I say, all the other provisions of the bill have been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and have been unanimously favorably reported, and make no charge whatever against the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the chairman to state also to the House that the Secretary of the Interior has passed upon and approved all the several bills, that there is no objection on the part of the Members, either of the minority or the majority, to the bills, they carrying no appropriations, and are mere matters of detail in legislation, usually to correct errors that ought to be corrected in various bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can describe the sections. Section 1 provides the means by which inherited lands of Indians may be sold. I need not go into a statement of the particulars. They have been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and by the Department of the Interior, which has favorably reported the bill.

Section 2 permits some persons who claim to have furnished material for certain Indians doing logging on the Menominee Reservation in Minnesota in 1880 to litigate their claim in court. These traders claim never to have been paid, and this provision permits them to go to the Court of Claims and there prosecute action, and further provides that if a judgment is obtained it shall be paid out of the Menominee funds.

Section 3 permits the heirs of an Indian named Cornplanter to bring suit to quiet title to the lands they hold. Somebody has claimed to have a certain right to these lands. It is not anything that interests the Government directly, but this section permits an action being tried in the Court of Claims to quiet the title.

Section 4 ratifies a lease made by the Seneca Indians.

Section 5 authorizes the heirs of Mr. Samuel Garland to prosecute before the Court of Claims his claim for services rendered to the Choctaw Indians, and providing that if a judgment is obtained it shall be paid out of the Choctaw funds.

Section 6 corrects the description in the appropriation bill referred to above.

Section 7 is one which creates additional town sites within the Choctaw and Chickasaw territory in the Indian Territory.

Section 8 is one which provides for the payment from the Cherokee Indian funds to certain Indians whom the court has held were deprived of their proportionate share of the funds when it was disposed of.

Section 9 relates to a school in New Mexico which was created through the beneficence of Mother Drexel, in Philadelphia, which school has been maintained solely by her. This permits her to obtain a patent to the land now occupied by this school, she having already spent from $12,000 to $16,000 in purchasing the alleged rights of a lot of squatters who were on that land.

Section 10 authorizes the alienation of lands that are now inalienable in the Indian Territory, where they are needed as school sites. That is what this bill does, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WALDO. Have you any knowledge as to the amount of the claim made under section 2?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; as I recall it now, it is about $58,000.

Mr. WALDO. And then, under the fifth section, the claim made against the Choctaw Nation, have you any idea about that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Garland claim?

Mr. WALDO. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman reporting the bill [Mr. CLAYTON] could answer that question, but I am informed that he is unable to be here this afternoon, and I can not say from memory; but it is in the thousands of dollars, I can not tell how many. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to take the bill and examine it and ascertain exactly what is in it. I am familiar with a great many items in the bill, having examined them when they were reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs in separate bills. I am not in favor of passing omnibus bills under the present rules. It is utterly impossible for any Member of the House either to keep track of what the House is doing or in any way to reach any particular item, if his objection to it should be sufficient to convince the House that that particular item should not pass. I believe it is a bad practice, regardless of the items in this bill, and I undertake to say that with the exception of a few members of the Committee on Indian Affairs who, I have no doubt, have considered very carefully all of the items in the bill, it is not possible for any other Member of the House intelligently to determine whether these items meet his judgment.

I have no desire to take the time of the House or to delay action upon the bill, but I do wish to express my dissatisfaction with this method of incorporating into one bill a large number of independent items.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that under the present conditions in the House, and the nearness of approach to the end of the session, it is impossible to get these various bills through unless we do group them into one general bill? They are matters of detail, every one of them a business matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has twice stated that they are matters of detail. They are not all matters of detail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have examined them very carefully in our committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not criticised any particular item. It is impossible to do so intelligently under the conditions. I wish to express my dissatisfaction with the policy of incorporating into one bill a large number of independent matters that have no relation to one another, so that no Member, even if he desired, would be able to point out legitimate objections to the several parts.

I have no desire to use any further time, and unless somebody else wishes time I shall reserve it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman does not desire to use the balance of his time, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, agreeing to the amendments, and passing the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, I move that the House do now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The yeas and nays upon that motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Pending the taking of the yeas and nays, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock, and upon that motion the gentleman from Missouri also asks the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 128, nays 63, answered "present" 13, not voting 184, as follows:

MESSANGER TO COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by myself April 24, 1908, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. The resolution is made necessary by the passage of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1908, the position of messenger to the Committee on Organization, Conduct, and Expenditures of the Executive Departments, provided for by resolution of January 31, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, abolished, and in lieu thereof the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at an annual salary of $1,440, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HEMENWAY April 29, 1908, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the University of the United States be, and the same is hereby, authorized to continue during vacation and for the remainder of the Sixtieth Congress the services of a stenographer, authorized by Senate resolution No. 59, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,000 per annum.

ASSISTANT TREASURER AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3956) authorizing a credit in certain accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 674) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 4, page 2, after the word "appropriated," to insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States the sum of $61,500, now carried in the accounts of the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at St. Louis, Mo., and in the general account of the Treasurer of the United States as unavailable funds, and representing a loss incurred in said office without default or negligence on the part of the assistant treasurer at St. Louis, said sum being the total amount carried in the statement of the Treasurer of the United States in his annual report for the year 1907 as unavailable funds, office of assistant treasurer at St. Louis. And for this purpose the said sum of $61,500 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 678) thereon. I ask that in the print of the bill the amendments be numbered.

I wish to make a brief statement to the Senate in regard to the bill, which I hope to be able to call up to-morrow. It will carry a large amount, possibly $32,000,000 or $33,000,000. As the House transmitted the bill to the Senate it carried something like $24,000,000, but, unfortunately for the Senate, perhaps, the House had not included in their estimates and recommendations any public buildings of a public character for the Government, leaving the Senate to take care of large amounts, if taken care of at all.

Senators in the amounts they have asked for were very reasonable and their requests were of a very limited number. I think Senators should be congratulated on their conservative requests for their particular States.

I hope when the bill comes before the Senate the Senate will support the committee in making provision for at least one or two public buildings for the use of the Government here in the city of Washington.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I present the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill. As I am not submitting any written statement with it, I will simply say that as the bill passed the Senate it carried $12,152,406, the bill having passed the House carrying $11,508,806, the increase in the Senate being $643,600. The decrease in conference amounts to $480,300, so that the increase over the amount as passed by the House is $163,300.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

REAR-ADMIRAL C. H. DAVIS.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7006) granting permission to Rear-Admiral C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a silver cup and salver and a silver punch bowl and cups, tendered to him by the British and Russian ambassadors, respectively, in the name of their Governments, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 676) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES IN ALASKA.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7111) for the relief of the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company, to report it favorably, with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 677) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, before the word "of," to strike out "Territory" and insert "District," and in line 15, after the word "land," to strike out the words "such bridges to be approved by the Secretary of War," so as to make the section read:

That the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate four bridges and their approaches thereto in the District of Alaska, located as follows: First, from the north end of Kanak Island to the mainland at or near Strawberry Point, on Controller Bay; second, from the east side of Kanak Island to the mainland on the west side of Controller Bay; third, across Bering Lake at or near the mouth of Bering River, and, fourth, across the Katalla River at or near its mouth connecting the town of Katalla with the east mainland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the said company shall have the right to locate its right of way along the navigable waters of Alaska, and as near thereto as may be necessary for the safe, economical, and efficient construction and operation of its line of railway, any restriction, condition, reservation, or easement provided in, by, or under any act of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3 in the following words:

SEC. 3. That said company shall be exempt from license tax on its railroad and terminals during the period of construction: Provided, That the total period of exemption shall not exceed five years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of four bridges across navigable waters in the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. KEAN. It ought to read: "district of Alaska."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the title will be so amended and the title as amended will be agree to.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States, to report it favorably with an amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting Senate bill 7112, covering the same subject-matter. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the substitute bill.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that this is an important measure and it had better be printed. I presume there will be no obstructive movement on the part of anyone, but I want to look into the measure.

Mr. HOPKINS. We can not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. BACON. It can not be now discussed, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] has given notice that he will speak this morning.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say that time is of the utmost importance in the consideration of this measure. The amendment to House bill 21899, in the nature of a substitute, is embraced in Senate bill 7112, which has been previously reported to this body and is on the Calendar. So, by the inspection of those two bills it will be entirely possible for the Senate to understand the bill which passed the House; also the bill which the Committee on Commerce proposes to substitute for the House bill. I am exceedingly anxious that this matter should be considered as soon as possible, as it will have to go to conference and time will be required for its disposal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. It is impossible to know the contents of the measure until it has been printed. Consequently I can not consent to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that as he has substituted the House bill and it is now on the Calendar, he should ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed, so that the two bills will not remain on the Calendar.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will speak to the Senator later on regarding the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

DONATION OF ORDNANCE.

Mr. WARREN. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 21410) granting condemned ordnance to certain institutions, and I submit a report (No. 673) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment was to add as section 13 the following:

SEC. 13. That the various cannon and other articles of ordnance property furnished under the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be required to be accounted for to the Chief of Ordnance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as section 14 the following:

SEC. 14. That the Chief of Ordnance is hereby authorized to sell without advertisement to patriotic organizations for military purposes surplus obsolete small arms and their equipments and ammunition at such prices as he may deem reasonable and just: Provided, That hereafter obsolete small arms and their equipment and ammunition shall not be disposed of to such organizations except as provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the Senator if the Rock Island proposition is incorporated in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. That is in the bill and also a provision for the Elgin (Ill.) Academy. Nothing is stricken out that the House put in. The Senator can examine the bill at the desk.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21410) granting condemned ordnance to certain institutions, reports the same to the Senate favorably and recommends that it be passed, amended as follows:

After line 3 on page 6 add the following:

"SEC. 13. That the various cannon and other articles of ordnance properly furnished under the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be required to be accounted for to the Chief of Ordnance.

"SEC. 14. That the Chief of Ordnance is hereby authorized to sell, without advertisement, to patriotic organizations, for military purposes, surplus obsolete small arms and their equipments and ammunition, at such prices as he may deem reasonable and just: Provided, That hereafter obsolete small arms and their equipment and ammunition shall not be disposed of to such organizations except as provided for in this act."

The legislation granting condemned cannon referred to in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the within bill has heretofore been remarked upon by the War Department, as will be seen in the various House reports upon the individual cases contained in this omnibus ordnance bill. That referred to in sections 6 and 7 has not been reported upon. The same statement can be made in regard to all of the sections, however, that the guns called for are on hand in the War Department, are obsolete, and are useful to the Department only as old material, for which their value is about 12 cents per pound. The bronze guns on hand are of three general classes, namely, 12-pounder heavy, 12-pounder light, and 6-pounder, weighing, respectively, about 1,750 pounds, about 1,200 pounds, and about 880 pounds each. In some cases the sections of the bill call for guns of a particular class, in others they do not; if the lightest gun should be given in all of the cases in which the class is not specified, the total weight of those called for by the bill would be about 21,000 pounds, corresponding to a value of about $2,520; if light 12-pounders should be given in all such unspecified cases, the total weight would be about 36,000 pounds, corresponding to a value of about $4,320. The guns have no special historical value, and their donation is merely a question of giving away material of the money value mentioned.

The Department has also remarked upon the legislation contained in section 9, and upon the principle of that contained in section 12, to the following effect: At the low prices secured for these obsolete arms and equipments, it would, in the opinion of the Department, be more advantageous for the Government in its general policy of encouragement of military instruction and drill of youth to issue the arms to institutions other than those mentioned in the laws now authorizing such issues than to sell these arms, equipments, etc., provided that these institutions could be regularly inspected by Army officers, as are the institutions to which such issues may now be lawfully made, in order to insure that the Government is obtaining a proper return for the use of the property. In view, however, of the present lack of officers available for the purpose, such inspections would probably not be practicable.

The Department has not remarked upon legislation such as that contained in sections 8, 10, and 11. The organizations mentioned in these sections probably desire the guns for parade purposes, and there are a large number of such organizations in the country who would probably desire similar donations to such an extent as to make a drain of which it would be difficult to estimate the magnitude upon the supply of obsolete guns which the Government now either sells for a considerable aggregate amount or issues to institutions of certain classes. The Department now sells obsolete Springfield rifles with bayonets at as low a price as $2 for each rifle, and sells gun slings and cartridge belts for 20 cents each. In consideration of the easy possibility of thus obtaining these arms, and of the great demand for them which would probably result if the practice were inaugurated of donating them to organizations whose use of them would not be such as to promote military training of the youth of the country, neither the Department nor your committee favors legislation making such donations, which, although unimportant in the few cases within mentioned, would, as instances of a policy, deprive the Government of a source of considerable income. Hence the amendment proposed by section 14 of the bill as reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I have been patiently obedient to that unwritten law in this august body which imposes silence upon new Senators until their seniors have exhausted all subjects of public concern, and I find myself to-day remitted to the crumbs that have fallen from the table, without much hope that what I shall say will disturb the serenity of the party in power any more than the appeals of Lazarus disturbed the banquet of Dives.

Nevertheless, it is my purpose to make some comparisons and to draw some conclusions, not only with reference to the shaky financial policy of that party, but to the alarming conditions which have grown out of their tariff system, as a warning to my friends on the other side of this Chamber to beware of the fate of Dives.

I do not think, Mr. President, that there could be a better time for Senators to pause and contemplate the sowing and the reaping of the party in power than in the dying hours of a Congress which has appropriated a billion dollars in a single session to pay the expenses of once a democratic, but now an imperial, Republic.

I have not prepared an elaborate discussion of the tariff or the financial question or any other question, but shall fire a single scattering shot on the state of the Union.

We are told by the scientists that the two great forces which control our planetary system are the centrifugal force, which is the tendency of the planets to leave their orbits and fly away from the sun, and the centripetal force, which is the tendency of the sun to draw the planets to its bosom.

And so perfectly are these two forces balanced that they hold our entire system in exact equilibrium.

If the centrifugal force should overcome the centripetal, the planets would fly off at a tangent from the sun and the system would be broken up and destroyed.

On the other hand, if the centripetal force should overcome the centrifugal, the planets would be drawn into the bosom of the sun and the system would be blotted from the heavens.

Mr. President, are not the laws which govern the planetary system a beautiful illustration of the fundamental principles which underlie our Government?

And are not these very principles laid down in our written Constitution, which establishes the equilibrium of power between the States and the National Government, so that the States are intended to revolve about a common Federal center, held in their true orbits by the two mighty reciprocal forces of State sovereignty and Federal supremacy?

It was the dream of Jefferson and our fathers that the perfect equipoise of these two forces of the Republic should be maintained undisturbed, and that our free institutions might thus be handed down to coming generations. But early in the life of the Republic there was developed a strong tendency of the centrifugal force to overcome the centripetal force, and in the war of 1861-1865 the Southern States undertook to leave their orbits and break up the system. But the centripetal force triumphed in that memorable struggle which put Yankee Doodle on the pension list and Dixie on crutches, and instead of restoring the equilibrium the sun has been drawing the planets to its bosom ever since.

Mr. President, the system is as surely out of balance to-day as it was in 1861. And what is the difference to us, whether we leave our orbit and go cavorting among the stars to freeze to death on the outskirts of creation, or whether we are drawn the other way to be converted into fuel for the sun?

What is the difference whether we go the secession route or the centralization route? They both mean the destruction of the system.

I do not pretend to be a great constitutional lawyer, but if that instrument means anything at all, it is that all power not expressly conferred upon the Federal Government is reserved to the States.

But, Mr. President, in these imperial days, when concentrated wealth is intrenched under the Dome of the Capitol and centralized power is enthroned in the White House, what can be expected but the gradual encroachment of the Federal Government upon the reserved rights of the States? How can the equilibrium be preserved under the reign of a big stick and a bag of gold?

Are not concentrated wealth and centralized power dictating the policies of the Government and controlling the legislation of Congress?

The venerable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], whom I have learned to reverence and love since I entered the Senate, and whom I honored and respected even before I knew him, struck the keynote in a speech delivered not long ago in this body, in which he said:

There is no time in our history, not even at the close of our great war, when the relations between the States and the General Government were so critical and so dangerous as they are to-day.

My reading of history leads me to believe that encroachments of power have always come insidiously. They have rarely come openly. You may keep State lines, you may have a distinction between the sections of the country, but when you disregard the rights of those States and commence to legislate for them, you will not be a very great way from a disruption of this Republic and the breaking up of it into several republics or something worse.

This grand old man is a prophet. The dews of life's evening are condensing on his brow, and the shadows of the long, long night are falling around him, but with a heart full of devotion to his country he stands here in our midst in his declining years to plead for the preservation of the Union inaugurated by our fathers, and to protest against the ever-increasing tendency to disrupt it by the wholesale disregard of the rights of the States guaranteed by the Constitution.

Mr. President, "The Man on Horseback" is again silhouetted against the horizon at the other end of the Avenue. General Grant, as ominous as he seemed, never dreamed of the power that is now assumed. The danger of it all lies in the complacency of the people. What a far cry it is from the splendid popularity of Grant to the ever-increasing assumptions of rulers who now hold the reins of power!

Andrew Johnson was impeached for alleged usurpations which to-day would be accounted conservative. When history is fairly written it will record the living truth that he was struggling to carry out Lincoln's policies and he will stand out as one of the greatest Presidents this country ever had.

I listened the other day with vivid interest to the portentous speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], pregnant with monitory wisdom and warning, as he pointed out the slow and easy gradations by which governmental power is being centralized and how the people, yielding a little here and a little there, grow careless, and encroachment takes courage for further aggression.

Sir, the army of centralization is even now just moving in to occupy position in the "Twilight Zone," and its videttes are watching the passes that lead toward the States, ready to seize and occupy advanced position. The States are mere twinkling stars in this "Twilight Zone," and their ineffectual fires are paling gradually as the light breaks over the mountain top from the central luminary at Washington.

We have had added recently to that other judicial monstrosity, "government by injunction," a new mendacity, to be called "government by interpretation," and where, do you imagine, a better place could be found to incubate that monstrous idea than in the land of ceaseless revolutions and dictators?

The new doctrine is enunciated by no less a personage than the Secretary of State, who, after traversing the countries where constitutions are not held in much regard, imbibed the new idea and came back to declare that if the States shall longer fail or refuse to exercise their reserved powers, means would be found to interpret into the Constitution the power of the Federal Government to exercise them.

To my mind, the most dangerous heresy that has ever threatened free government is that very modern notion that interpretation can take the place of formal amendment.

Even our Secretary of State, the high priest in the temple of liberty, has given voice to a false doctrine that holds in it the seeds of disintegration in declaring that the Constitution must be interpreted to fit conditions instead of conditions being forced to conform to the Constitution. Such doctrine is downright apostasy from the faith delivered to us by the fathers.

We can not afford to cut loose from the safe moorings of the Constitution and drift with the tide of ever-varying change.

We have a safe and sure standard in it, and it is far better to endure its limitations, even when they entail inconvenience, than to break down the old safeguards.

I denounce the doctrine that the Constitution can be stretched as worse than heresy, for it borders upon treason itself and forbodes the downfall of the Republic.

Sir, I know it is not popular here to talk about either State rights or the Constitution, for the ideas of Jefferson have been eclipsed by the ideals of Hamilton, and Federalism is in power. A new system has been built upon the ashes of the old, and tariff is its patron saint. Protection is the shibboleth of Federalism, and Federalism is the arch enemy of democratic government. It is the motive power behind the legislation of Congress; it is the inspiration of all the dreams of the President, even while he wins the plaudits of the people by proclaiming the beauty of democratic policies.

But, sir, I can not understand the consistency of battling for the perpetuation of a tariff system which has created the stupendous problems that dance like the wild terror of the storm on the horizon of our future and then regaling Congress with lurid messages denouncing the storm.

I can not understand the consistency of clubbing the trust over the head and at the same time fighting for tariff, the mother of the trust.

I would not reflect upon the Chief Executive of the nation. On the contrary, I would praise him for the noble things he has done during his incumbency, chief of which was turning on the light and revealing the enormity of the crimes his party has committed.

I honor him for the reforms he has demanded, because they are Democratic reforms, and the few that have been enacted into laws are Democratic laws as well as the lashings he has given his party leaders for failing to enact them.

The interstate-commerce law, controlling the railroads of the country, is a Democratic policy. The great Isthmian Canal was thought out and pressed for years by a grand old Democratic Senator from Alabama. But our peerless President reached the limit when he seized all the best reform planks of all the Democratic platforms of the past and planted himself squarely upon them.

Was there ever a grander spectacle of coup d'état than this in the history of American politics?

The question for you on the other side of this Chamber to settle is, Are you going to put his reform policies in your platform at Chicago? If you are, why don't you indorse Bryan and be done with it? If you are not, you will repudiate your President.

He demanded the reform of the tariff system in the beginning of his Administration, but of late he has contented himself with storming the citadels of wealth created by the tariff.

He has not laid the ax at the root of the tree, but has only thundered at the rich ripe fruit that hangs upon its boughs.

Mr. President, the great leading spirits of the Democracy, and their followers as well, have earnestly and persistently protested against the present high protective system through all the passing years, because it is indirect taxation of the people—the most insidious and destructive form of taxation ever conceived by the brain of man.

They have protested against it because they saw with prophetic vision the awful results which would follow—an endless war between capital and labor and the concentration of all wealth in the centers. And not only these, but the centralization of power at the National Capital, stripping the States of the power they once enjoyed under the Constitution—the power to govern themselves.

The tariff system has done it all, and more. It has driven American sails from the high seas and given our carrying trade to the ships of other nations.

It has delivered American consumers over to the mercy of American manufacturers, and the American manufacturers have lost no time in consuming the consumers; it has shifted the great bulk of our wealth into the hands of a few men under the forms of law, and given them the power to control the legislation not only of States, but of the Federal Government.

It is the strong right arm of Federalism upon which lean the great monopolies of industry and trade which have been exacting tribute money for more than forty years from the millions who toil in the fields and at the workbench and in the shop for their daily bread, and which have been draining the whole country of its substance in the name of liberty and free Government. We have fretted the continent with 200,000 miles of railroads, but they have been consolidated and conjured into the hands of a few representatives of aggregated wealth, who fix all the rates of transportation and therefore the prices of all the wheat and corn and cotton and coal and iron and horses and mules and cattle and all the output of industry between the two great oceans that divide the world. Is this not the concentration of wealth and the centralization of power?

But the railroads are only one string in the harp of a thousand strings upon which our modern Orpheus is playing the triumphal march of centralization. We hear a note from the metallic string of the steel trust, and a long, sweet strain from the sugar trust, and a bellowing note from the beef trust, and the dingdong of the copper trust, and the ping pong of the leather trust, and the sing-song of a thousand other trusts, all of which are the legitimate results of an abnormal tariff system. They are compelling the small industries of the country to sell out to them or be crushed in the coils of the serpent.

They are sweeping out every vestige of competition in every department of manufacture and trade, which is the only safeguard of the people.

No wonder we hear the burning appeals for reform in the messages of the President. No wonder we hear the mutterings of a long-suffering people.

Mr. President, the tariff will never be reformed by a Republican Administration. It is true that all the Republican candidates for the Presidency are falling over each other in their effort to regale the American people with the most plausible promises of tariff revision, but none of them promise tariff reform.

I have heard the brilliant young Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] make the Senate ring with arguments in favor of tariff revision.

And, sir, no less a personage than our splendid Vice-President, who has presided over this body with such eminent ability and with such fairness and impartiality to all, has reenforced the Senator from Indiana with this declaration in a recently published letter:

There is one potential fact which must not be obscured, and it is this: Revision must be along protection lines. Furthermore, revision must be made by those who are firm in the protection faith.

I am sure our Vice-President is sincere, but the substance of this declaration has been made on the eve of every political campaign for the last quarter of a century.

But when the election is over it is good-bye reform, farewell sweet revision—fa, ta—till the next campaign. [Laughter.]

If the object is to lower the tariff schedules, why have not the mighty men who control legislation in Congress rolled up their sleeves and gone to work to accomplish the fulfillment of their oft-repeated pledges to the country?

Why was not the work begun four years ago, or two years ago, or in this session? Why demand a tariff commission now? Why have they not called in their chief priests and scribes and scaled the tariff to a reasonable basis?

But, Mr. President, they have never yet informed us whether they intend to revise it up or revise it down. The probability is it will be skyward, for the story has been told that when pressed for a specific statement on that subject the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the lower House, a leader of immense will power and with the ability to enforce his ideas, looked toward heaven and exclaimed:

The Republican party will revise the tariff up or down, as it pleases.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK is authority for the statement that another latter-day revisionist has solved that lately invented puzzle called "maximums and minimums" by the declaration that his party will make the Dingley schedules the minimum and the blue vault of heaven the maximum. Who that knows the history of legislation upon the tariff can doubt that there may come a time in the dim and distant future when, if they survive the present Administration, they will give us an ethereal tariff commission? But what will it do? Is the servant greater than his master? Will it not follow in the footsteps of all the saints who have gone before and recommend a continuation of the balloon policy?

Who ever heard of a Republican reforming a trust, or of a high protectionist reforming the tariff?

Satan would have been delighted with the plan of salvation if he had been allowed to write it, but there would have been but little hope for poor fallen man if the terms of salvation had been dictated by that old black Republican of the nether world. [Laughter.]

Go back and read the history of broken promises and see how the friends of tariff have reformed it.

In the national platform of 1884 you will find these words: The Republican party pledges itself to revise the inequalities of the tariff and reduce the surplus.

In its platform of 1888 we find it denouncing the effort of a Democratic Congress to cut down the tariff.

In 1892 the balloon comes down again, and the platform declares that—

There should be duties levied, equal to the difference between wages abroad and at home.

At the beginning of its reign it was the wet nurse of our infant industries, but when the infants grew up and half whiskers [laughter], it shifted the shibboleth to "protection to American industry and American labor." And now it shouts on the eve of another campaign: "If we can only save the red-headed man, we will revise him."

In that same platform of 1892 it points with pride to "the success of the Republican policy of reciprocity."

In the name of Heaven, what success, and what reciprocity? Why sir, James G. Blaine wore his great life away in the vain endeavor to persuade his party into the policy of reciprocity, and James G. Blaine failed and died.

The Dingley tariff bill piled up the duties like Ossas on Pelions and then added an all-round addition of 20 per cent more for a margin to trade upon, and then when the lamented McKinley negotiated the treaties, our modern tariff revisionists repudiated them, and they lie to-day in Republican pigeonholes, sleeping the sleep that knows no waking.

In 1896 the high-tariff balloon was about to get caught on a silver snag and the Republican party threw out more ballast and more promises of revision.

In 1900 a new shibboleth was found in a gambling hell, and they named it "stand pat," and a new glory fell prone upon their faces at Chicago, and the protected industries opened their money bags and Wall street shouted hallelujah, and it was like the voice of many waters. But they were not unmindful of the great republican agricultural States of the Middle West and they threw out more ballast and more promises of revision.

And thus they rise in every campaign toward the blue vault, loaded with sand to throw into the eyes of the American people. Four years ago Mr. Secretary Root was admitting the necessity of a revision of the tariff before the Home Market Club. A Presidential race was coming on, and the people must be blinded with sand. The Secretary said:

The political party which believes in protection should do the revising. That party can be trusted to do it in due time.

How long is "due time" from a high-protection standpoint? Perhaps if Methuselah were living he might solve the riddle. The great Secretary continued:

It should be done when Congress is as free as possible from the distractions and temptations of an active Presidential campaign.

And still the old balloon descends to the minimum in every campaign and rises to the blue cerulean after every election.

What kind of a law is this, Mr. President, that requires apologies and promises of revision and rectification at every election?

A distinguished Member of the lower House of Congress from the State of Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], every inch a man except in politics, said, in an outburst of enthusiasm, not long ago:

There never will be another tariff law that will treat the industries of New England with the consideration they enjoy to-day.

He reflected the true sentiments of his people, for who ever imagines that New England, smart as she is, owning the earth as she does, and reaching out after the moon and stars—who ever imagines that her people will ever permit a revision of the tariff schedules without a death struggle ought to have his head bored for bugs and be relegated to the asylum. [Laughter.] No, sir; rather than permit that, New England will stand pat on two deuces for a thousand years. [Laughter.] Ah, there is the shibboleth again: "Stand pat." What does "stand pat" mean? Boiled down to its final sediment, it means purely and simply that the party now in power is determined to cling to the present system of high protective tariff without lowering a single schedule till the end of time.

But not so with the Western Republicans. The White House got the revision idea into the Ohio platform not long ago, and then General KEIFER got it out again, and I will ask the Secretary to read a clipping, and beg him to be careful to emphasize it so that its beauty may not be lost. I got it from The Commoner, a paper published in Lincoln, Nebr., by one William J. Bryan, the next President of the United States, and I know of 6,000,000 voters who will vouch for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The awful charge is now made that at the recent session of the Ohio Republican convention Messrs. Roosevelt and Taft, aided by Congressman BURTON, "tried to insert a real Democratic tariff plank in a Republican platform." Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER, a standpatter, is credited with having foiled the attempt. The story is told by the Washington correspondent for the Omaha World-Herald in this way: "The story of this plank offered by Mr. BURTON will be used in the effort to scare orthodox protection Republicans away from Taft. The stand-pat tariff men are fighting him now. The American Economist, organ of the American Protective Tariff League, is crying, 'Help, police,' against Taft in every issue. The charge put out to-night is that Mr. BURTON, with the approval of Roosevelt and the Roosevelt candidate, tried to have the Ohio platform charge the tariff with fostering monopolies and trusts. Bryan never had unkindler words than these for the Dingley and McKinley laws, so the Republican reactionaries say. The Ohio platform's history began in conferences held here in which the President, Secretary Taft, Congressman BURTON, Secretary Garfield, and Attorney-General Wade H. Ellis took part. When the rough draft they completed was turned over to the convention committee on resolutions at Columbus that committee struggled with it for a bit, according to the dispatches, and then turned the problem over to a subcommittee of which Mr. BURTON was chairman, and several Ohio Congressmen members; Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER was one of these. The platform, as adopted, had this tariff plank: "A revision of the tariff by a special session of the next Congress, insuring the maintenance of the true principle of protection by imposing such customs duties as will equal the difference between the costs of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit, to the end that without excessive duties American manufacturers, farmers, producers, and wage-earners may have adequate protection." The story put out here to-night is that Mr. BURTON offered a plank which followed the sentence demanding revision by the next Congress with the words, "To the end that the further fostering of trusts and monopolies by the tariff shall be prevented." Members of the subcommittee who are here admit that the plank as written above was that Mr. BURTON offered, to the best of their recollection. It is said that the Cleveland Congressman assured the subcommittee that he had consulted with the party leaders most interested on his plank and that it had their approval. This was accepted as an assurance that the President and Secretary Taft had approved it. Nevertheless Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER offered a prompt and warm protest against talk of fostering trusts and monopolies in connection with the tariff plank of the Ohio Republicans and enough of the subcommittee took his view to chloroform the Burton plank then and there."

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, it is plain, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that there is trouble in Israel on this great, vital question. It is plain that the party in power is afraid of it, for the sand in the old balloon has about given out and the whole country is opening its eyes.

That stern old man at the other end of the Capitol [Mr. Speaker CANNON], who holds the legislation of the Republic in the hollow of his hand, comes down with the gavel and cuts the hamstrings of every movement for tariff reform. The beloved Vice-President at this end of the Capitol, with a smile that suggests eternal summer, says that if it is revised it must be done by those firm in the protection faith, and along protection lines, while the peerless evangelist of civic righteousness at the White House attempts to usher in reform by holding up to the gaze of the world the rich and powerful legates of the tariff system as synonyms of dishonesty and brutality in high life, and endeavors to reform the trusts by fining the trustees and threatening them with free passes to Sing Sing.

Mr. President, this question will not down. It ought to be the paramount issue of the coming campaign, because it is the most vital of them all to the American people. It involves the future of this country and the very life of our free institutions. I have but little sympathy with all this railing against the men who have drawn the wealth of the people into their own vaults under the operation of the laws and policies enacted and enforced by the same political party which has placed the reins of centralized power in the hands of the President of the United States. They have only taken advantage of laws enacted for their benefit and the wrath of the people should be leveled rather at the pernicious laws than at the men who reap these enormous "benefits to American industries." Why rail at the men and continue the law?

We are only repeating the history of the world. Nations have gone to sleep with their wealth distributed, and woke to find it shifted as if by magic to a few centers and controlled by a few men. They have gone to sleep with all power distributed among the people, and woke to find it centralized.

In some nations the shifting of wealth has been done by sheer force. In ours it has been done by legislation. It is handed out to a loving people in a basket of tariff blossoms, redolent with protection, but the leech lies concealed among the flowers. It is the drawing power of indirect taxation. It is high tariff.

Mr. President, the people of the country will not, in my judgment, be longer hoodwinked by this same old promise of revision. They have not forgotten the glowing pledge in the Republican platform of 1900, that—

The country is now justified in expecting, and it will be the policy of the Republican party to bring about, a reduction of war taxes.

But that promise, with all the rest which I have quoted, as soon as the polls were closed vanished like a sweet scent before a high wind.

And now the Senator from Indiana, just when the winds of another campaign begin to blow, demands a tariff commission to investigate and revise. I think the Senator is sincere, but he is in a hopeless minority in his party.

There is no doubt about the situation, not only as to the attitude of the schedules, but as to the incongruity of the classifications.

I ask the Secretary to lend me his voice again, and read a paragraph or two from a recent publication upon this subject. The Secretary read as follows:

The Dingley bill had among its majority Members only four men, Messrs. Dingley, PAYNE, DALZELL, and Hoskins—a newspaper editor and three attorneys—who had any previous experience, and Mr. Benton McMillan, of the minority. That men so inexperienced should have hastily made a tariff for this nation "was worse than a crime; it was a blunder." They only made a great, blind jab at the task. They began wrong by taking classifications more than a generation old, very inapplicable to their time, having neither knowledge nor time to consider that important phase of the subject at all adequately, and consequently we have had 300,000 lawsuits on classifications and appraisals, nine-tenths of which might have been avoided.

Says Senator BEVERIDGE of the incongruities of these classifications:

BUTTONS AND STOVES CLASSED TOGETHER!

"Will anyone contend that a simple article like nails or wire requires the same amount of protection as so complex a mechanism as a revolver or an electric dynamo?"

"Is there any logic in classing buttons and stoves together?"

"Should bullets and buggies, should automobiles and bull's-eye lanterns pay the same duty?"

"Are farm implements and gold boxes in the same class?"

"Is there any connection between carriages and dress trimmings?"

"Why classify railway cars and enameled portraits together?"

"Why should cannon for war and crosses for churches be put in the same class?"

"Yet all these are in the same classification and pay the same rates."

"But more absurd than this is the fact that they are put in the same classification by the appraisers and the courts, passing on each article because Congress did not classify them at all."

"And as outrageous as it is absurd is the fact that nobody knew what duties these articles would have to pay until the guess of the appraisers and the courts filled up the holes in the law."

Mr. TAYLOR. And yet, Mr. President, the Senator's party stands pat until the day of reckoning comes, and then like the ostrich it sticks its head in the sand, forgetting that the deeper it goes the higher it unfurls its tail feathers. I do not mean to convey the impression that the Democracy is opposed to a reasonable tariff. It has always adhered to the doctrine of incidental protection, recognizing the fact that the Government must have revenue and that tariff is the best method of getting it, but beyond the revenue basis it draws the line. It stands firmly upon the principle that every dollar that any man is compelled by law to pay as tribute money to any other man or corporation, either directly or indirectly, is the most oppressive form of taxation, and that no government can stand whose people perpetuate and sustain such a policy, for it will always weave the power of a nation into webs of glory around the golden thrones of money kings.

Wealth and political power go hand in hand together. Where wealth is distributed, political power is always diffused; where wealth is concentrated, political power is always centralized; and where wealth is concentrated and political power is centralized, liberty has always taken its flight and free government has perished among its worshipers.

I have read that when Egypt fell 2 per cent of her people owned 97 per cent of the wealth of Egypt; when Babylon fell 1 per cent of her people owned practically all the wealth of Babylon; when Rome fell 600 people owned the Empire of Rome.

And are we not following rapidly in their wake when in the morning of the twentieth century, under the reign of a Republican tariff taxation system and a national banking system, based upon the indebtedness of the country, we have reached the point where 10 per cent of the American people own and control 90 per cent of all the wealth under the flag?

Mr. President, our financial system is the Siamese twin of the tariff system, and while the financial system is the weak brother of the pair, yet they are bound together by the cartilage of Federal protection. This is a nation of 80,000,000 of ordinary mortals and 6,000 banks. The party in power see only the 6,000.

This is a nation of many millions of consumers and a few thousand corporations, but the party in power see only the corporations. This is a nation of many millions who work for their daily bread and a few hundred millionaires, but the party in power see only the millionaires.

The corporations and millionaires furnish the "sinews of war" for the campaign, and the party in power furnish the laws to pile up the fortunes of those who furnish the "sinews."

Mr. President, I am now about to call up the ghost of a murdered friend of the common people. I can not escape it in rambling through the old records of the party in power.

It stalked through the Senate during the panic. It shakes its gory locks at you on the other side of this Chamber to-day as you fortify your banking system with asset currency against the panic. It is the ghost of the silver dollar of our fathers.

In 1884 your platform urged:

That effort should be made to unite the commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

Four years later, in 1888, your party made a bold stand for bimetallism, and thus spake your platform:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

In 1892 you waxed firmer and stronger for the double standard, but how did you keep the faith you pledged? I am not discussing now the merits of the question—the time for that is passed. I am only lifting the curtain upon the record.

In your platform of 1896 you turned you backs on silver and hoisted the gold standard and made it the paramount issue of the campaign. You unhorsed silver and left it dead on the field, and then, flushed with victory and puffed up with pride, you proclaimed that the gold standard and the national banking system would give us the greatest financial system in the world.

You have boasted this in the press and in the forum and in every campaign ever since, until last October, when your system got out of balance and your currency went whizzing into the bosoms of old stocking legs and into the craters of safes and vaults and it rained clearing-house certificates for three months. In the midst of this great panic I saw the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, stand upon the troubled waters with an emergency bill in his hand, and with a loud voice he cried to the howling storm, "Peace, be still," but there was no peace. And the tempest-tossed crew in the golden boat walled their eyes toward almighty Rockefeller and prayed, and they beckoned to Morgan, the king of corporate power, to throw them a life line. But the two omnipotent financiers could not leave the game on Wall street to go into the life-saving business.

Mr. President, the storm has spent its force, but what has it left in its track but wrecked hopes and shattered dreams?

Thousands of factories and shops have been closed; thousands of enterprises have toppled and fallen, and tens of thousands of laboring men have been thrown out of employment.

The whole country has been racking its brain to find out the cause of such a frightful panic in the very harvest time of our greatest prosperity. We were making wonderful progress in every field of endeavor.

The agricultural production of 1906 and 1907 was unprecedented, and the value of farm products, according to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], in 1907 exceeded the products of 1906 by nearly $500,000,000.

The business of our manufactories in that year was larger than in any other year in the history of the country. The increase of net earnings by the railroads was fabulous.

The balance of trade in favor of the United States in 1907 was $500,000,000.

More than 500 national banks were established in that year, and the deposits in all banks was $13,000,000,000.

The aggregate national-bank capital was nearly nine hundred millions.

The country seemed never more prosperous in all its history. But the panic came like a tidal wave, and all our boasted wealth could not stop it. It swept over Wall street and closed the doors of the banks everywhere. It submerged the railroads and the furnaces and mills and the wind blew down the gold standard.

There was some impelling cause behind it; there was some reason for it. Who made it possible, and why?

I shall not introduce Democratic witnesses in this prosecution. Let the indictment of the Republican party be based upon information furnished by Republicans in high places.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] declared in a great speech delivered in the Senate on March 17, 19, and 24, 1908, that two great groups of banks in New York—the National City Bank, controlled by Standard Oil, and the National Bank of Commerce, controlled by the Morgan interests—control the financial situation in the United States.

He declared that these two groups are knitted together by business associations which prophesy their ultimate unification. He declared in the open Senate that these two groups of banks—are joined together in mutual interest as shareholders in the various industrial concerns which have been financed by one or the other of these groups in recent years.

He declared that the fifty-two men who are directors of the banks standing at the head of these two groups are a part of a list of less than 100 men who control the industrial life of the nation. And he proved conclusively that these men control all the industrial, transportation, and financial business of the United States of America.

He declared that fourteen of the directors of the National City Bank (Standard Oil) are at the head of fourteen great combinations representing 38 per cent of the capitalization of all the industrial trusts of the United States, and that—

The railroad lines represented on the board of this one bank cover the country like a network.

And then he goes on to name the chief railroads controlled by them:

The Lackawanna, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Union Pacific, the Alton, the Missouri Pacific, the Chicago, Milwaukee and

St. Paul, the Chicago and Northwestern, the Rock Island, the Denver and Rio Grande, the Mexican National, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Northern Pacific, the New York Central, the Texas Pacific, the Erie, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Delaware and Hudson, the Illinois Central, the Manhattan Elevated of New York City, and the rapid transit lines of Brooklyn.

Mind you, fourteen out of the twenty-three directors of this one bank represent this network of railroads, and he proves further that the entire twenty-three directors of this bank, through their various connections, represent more than 350 other banks, trust companies, railroads, and industrial corporations, with an aggregate capitalization of more than twelve thousand millions of dollars.

He showed that the law providing that 15 per cent of the deposits of country banks to be held for the protection of their depositors, permitted three-fifths of the 15 per cent to be deposited in reserve city banks, and that of the 25 per cent of the reserve for the protection of depositors in reserve city banks one-half could be deposited with the central reserve city banks, and that as there are but three central reserve cities these two all-powerful groups in the city of New York could afford to offer good rates of interest, and therefore they drew a large proportion of lawful reserves from the country and city reserve banks.

He showed that one Standard Oil bank is the approved agent to receive deposits of lawful reserves of 1,071 national banks scattered over the country, and another bank of the same group receives the reserve deposits from 1,802 country banks and another from 478 banks, and that a leading Morgan bank receives deposits from 909 outside banks and another receives deposits from 615 banks and still another from 1,233 banks, and that thus they have gathered fabulous millions belonging to the depositors of smaller banks throughout the length and breadth of the whole country into the great national banks of New York.

He says that on August 22, 1907, the last call before the panic came, the New York banks owed the other banks of the country a net balance of more than four hundred and ten millions of dollars, and that when the panic struck the country the other banks were unable to withdraw more than about twenty and a half millions, or 5 per cent of their deposits in New York, and that they would have been unable to withdraw even this amount but for the action of the Secretary of the Treasury, who increased the United States deposits in the banks of New York during the panic by over forty-seven millions, and that, therefore, but one result could follow—the tying up of hundreds of millions of dollars of the wealth of the country.

Mr. President, the whole substance of his argument in that great speech and all his conclusions are: That the dreadful panic of 1907 was brought about by the manipulations of these stupendous financial institutions, not only for the purpose of adding a few hundred millions more to their credit, but for the other purpose of discrediting the Administration of President Roosevelt and stifling the voice of reform.

Right here let me say that the people of the Republican party of the State of Wisconsin have indorsed these utterances by instructing its delegation for Senator LA FOLLETTE for President of the United States.

If what he says is true, we are only reaping what we have sown. We are only gathering the harvest of high protective tariff and a totally inadequate financial system.

Sir, if a few groups of men hold in the hollow of their hands our railroad system and our industrial system and the insurance and trust companies of the whole country, and at the same time control the banking system, as has been conclusively proven on this floor by Republican statesmen, what is to hinder them from manipulating the rise and fall of prices of stocks and bonds and the prices of all commodities, up or down at will, and drawing money out of circulation and locking it in their vaults, as they have done in the recent past, not only as a rebuke to the Government in its effort to compel them to obey the law, but even threatening the downfall of our institutions and blocking the very progress of our civilization?

But, sir, I wish to introduce another witness, still higher in authority, in whose presence Wall street trembles and Ananias falls dead at his feet—the man of destiny—the Napoleon of the Western Hemisphere. It is true he does not make the frontiers of kingdoms oscillate on the map, but he is the peerless lion tamer of modern times.

I have heard his words crack like a bull whip about the ears of my friends on the other side of this Chamber, and the lions crouched as if ready to spring, but they sprang not. They feared their master, and fear him yet. But sometimes they have been defiant and raised their manes for battle. I have seen them lift their paws and make a swipe at the American Navy and slap two battle ships out of an appropriation bill. I have seen them lick the sores of a whole battalion of colored troops, figuratively speaking, and then, in fear of the wrath of the Ethiopian at the next election, slip away from the investigation of the Brownsville murders, leaving the negro in the wood pile. [Laughter.]

I have seen them attempt to make railroad bonds, town bonds, county bonds, and almost every kind of bonds a part of our banking system, in the face of their record as the champions of sound money and the gold standard.

I have heard them confess on this floor that our financial system is the poorest among all the great nations of the earth—poorer than the English system, poorer than the French system, poorer than the German system—but what have they done to strengthen and fortify it?

I have heard them advocate the issuance of all kinds of paper money, and the latest fulmination is a system of asset currency and rag money, juggled by the banks as a sort of scarecrow to frighten panics away from the financial cornfield, in the face of their record of denouncing the Democracy because it advocated the free coinage of silver.

Mr. President, I am confident that before our financial physicians get through with the job they will have the country in the condition of the old man in my State who was very sick.

The doctor examined him and said, "Old man, you're dying—have you any wish to express before you pass over the river?" "Yes," the feeble patient said, "I wish I had got another doctor." [Laughter.]

Let me read what the President of the United States said in his message of January 31, broadly hinting at one of the causes of the recent financial panic:

The public men, lawyers, and editors who loudly proclaim their sympathy for the "innocent stockholders" when a great law-defying corporation is punished are the first to protest with frantic vehemence against all efforts by law to put a stop to the practices which are the real and ultimate sources of the damage alike to the stockholders and the public. The apologists of successful dishonesty always declaim against any effort to punish or prevent it, on the ground that any such effort will "unsettle business." It is they who by their acts have unsettled business; and the very men raising this cry spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in securing, by speech, editorial, book, or pamphlet, the defence by misstatements of what they have done; and yet when public servants correct their misstatements by telling the truth they declaim against them for breaking silence, lest "values be depreciated." They have hurt honest business men, honest workmen, honest farmers; and now they clamor against the truth being told.

The keynote of all these attacks upon the effort to secure honesty in business and in politics is well expressed in brazen protests against any effort for the moral regeneration of the business world, on the ground that it is unnatural, unwarranted, and injurious, and that business panic is the necessary penalty for such effort to secure business honesty.

Mr. President, have not the policies of the party in power dragged the country to awful depths when the President of the United States finds it necessary to warn both Houses of Congress that the Republic is in danger of being overthrown by the machinations of concentrated wealth, which is the legitimate result of Republican policies? Is it not time for the country to wake when we are admonished by a Republican President to put the bit in the mouth of centralized corporate power to prevent it from trampling under its hoofs all that is left of liberty and free government?

We boast that our safety rests upon the sovereignty of the people and that this makes our Republic the Samson of the ages. But has not Samson been shorn of his locks while yet he slumbers with the ballot in his hand? Is not the Rip Van Winkle of popular government lost in the Catskill Mountains of centralism? Has he not drunk too deep from the drug of indifference? Is he not sleeping too long on his rights, and will he not some day rise up from his trance to find the gunstock of liberty rotted from the barrel at his side and nothing but the skeleton of national happiness lying at his feet? It will then be too late to cry retrenchment and reform and tariff commissions, for—

What do wealth and power care
For Samson when he's lost his hair?
The tears are vain that Rip doth shed;
He slept too long; his dog is dead.
Thus states are shorn and nations weep
For crimes committed while they sleep.

But, Mr. President, amid these impending dangers and in this gloom of fear there is still a star of hope shining through the rifted clouds. It is the intelligence and patriotism of the American people themselves. And I trust and firmly believe that the clouds will soon pass away, as with the might of the ballot box a righteous public opinion shall grapple these problems and bind them in the chains of the Constitution.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Applause is not permitted by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has had much to say about the concentration of wealth in this country in the hands of a few. To show the distribution of wealth, I desire to call his attention to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency made last December. I find from that report that the amount deposited in the savings institutions of this country is $3,690,078,945, and the number of depositors is 8,588,811.

Allow me to say, Mr. President, that that does not look much like concentration of wealth in this country in the hands of a few men. The depositors constitute in number one-tenth of the population of the United States, and there are over $3,600,000,000 in the savings institutions of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may in his discretion designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this act."

And that the House agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
C. D. CLARK,
A. J. McLAURIN,

PORTO RICO PROVISIONAL REGIMENT.

Mr. du PONT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry. I have some amendments to the bill to submit on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. du PONT. In section 3, page 2, line 2, after the word "Infantry," I move to strike out the words "who have had not less than five years' service therein, and" and to insert "appointed or," so as to make the section read:

That the present captains and lieutenants of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry appointed or who were reappointed after a mental, physical, and professional examination, may be recommissioned as officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. du PONT. I move to strike out section 4 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 4. That the lieutenants, natives of Porto Rico, now holding provisional commissions, may continue to serve until the expiration of such commissions, when, after an examination as to their mental, physical, and professional fitness, they may be recommissioned as officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. du PONT. I move that the remaining sections be renumbered so as to be sections 4, 5, and 6 instead of sections 5, 6, and 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of lands at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a corporation to be hereafter duly organized under the name and style of the Cordova Bay Harbor Improvement and Town-Site Company and composed of the following-named persons, to wit: John H. McGraw, Edward Levin, and Donald A. McKenzie, or any of them, and such others as may hereafter become associated with them as incorporators, shall be permitted to purchase at the price of $2.50 per acre not to exceed 5,000 acres of such nonmineral lands of the United States as may be selected by said corporation and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, including tide or mud flats, situated at the head of Cordova Bay, at approximately latitude 60° 30' north, and longitude 146° west of Greenwich, in the district of Alaska, the same to be located in as nearly compact form as possible with a water front of not to exceed 2 miles on Cordova Bay, in order to effect the improvement of said lands for town-site purposes and for the promotion and convenience of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Sec. 2. That no land covered by any valid existing claim or right heretofore initiated or recognized under any law of the United States shall be subject to entry under this act until all rights thereunder have been transferred to said corporation or relinquished to the United States.

Sec. 3. That a harbor area 1,000 feet in width, to be established by the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, in front of and abutting upon the lands which said corporation shall apply to purchase under this act, is hereby reserved and shall forever remain under the control of the United States, in trust, however, for the future State which may be created including the same, or any part thereof, within its boundaries: Provided, That wharves, docks, slips, and waterways may be constructed and maintained within such harbor area in accordance with plans approved by the Secretary of War; but the public shall at all times have the use of all such wharves, docks, slips, and waterways upon the payment of such reasonable charges, and under such regulations as may from time to time be fixed and prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 4. That the right of eminent domain may, after the issuance of patent hereunder, be exercised over any lands purchased under this act, whether such lands may have been included within streets and alleys or otherwise, under any law applicable to lands held in private ownership in the district of Alaska, and no exclusive right of way shall be granted to any railroad, telegraph, telephone, or other company or corporation over the lands purchased under this act.

Sec. 5. That the corporation named in this act shall, within six months after the approval hereof, file with the register and receiver of the land district within which the lands applied for are situated an application to purchase under this act, which application shall particularly describe the lands applied for and be accompanied with a certified copy of the field notes and plat of the survey of the boundaries of such lands, made under the direction and supervision of the surveyor-general of the district of Alaska.

Sec. 6. That the corporation named in this act shall, within twelve months after the approval of the application named in the foregoing section, subject to the approval and under the directions of the Secretary of the Interior, file with the said Secretary a detailed plan of a town site, embracing the lands applied for, upon which shall be delineated adequate streets, alleys, lots, blocks, wharves, docks, slips, and waterways, and such reservations as the said Secretary may deem necessary and suitable for public use as parks and sites for public and school buildings, and coaling stations: Provided, That the reservations for public parks shall, in addition to such other lands as may be needed for that purpose, include all of said lands which can not be reasonably utilized as sites for building purposes; and said corporation shall, after patent, dedicate and convey all of the said reservations for such public uses.

Sec. 7. That the corporation named in this act, or its assigns, shall, within six months from the approval of the plan mentioned in the preceding section, pay to the proper receiver the full purchase price of the lands applied for; and within five years after the issuance of patent said corporation shall do all things necessary to render 320 acres of the lands purchased suitable and available for wharfage and town-site purposes in accordance with the plan thereof submitted as required in section 6 of this act; and if said corporation or its assigns shall fail to comply with any of the terms and conditions of this act, either before or after the issuance of patent, all interests, rights, or title which may have accrued or vested under this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and the application under which they accrued, or the patent under which they vested, shall be canceled: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, on satisfactory showing, reasonably extend the time within which any of the acts enumerated in this act may be performed: Provided further, That no locations or entries of any kind under the public-land laws applicable to the Territory of Alaska shall be made within one-half mile of the exterior limits of the land purchased by said corporation under section 1 hereof.

Sec. 8. That said corporation shall have the right to confine the waters of Cordova Creek to one channel and to straighten and deepen the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator a question in regard to the last section? Has it the approval of the Secretary of War?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it has the approval of the Department.

Mr. KEAN. Of the Secretary of War?

Mr. NELSON. It was not referred to him, but I can not see any objection to it, because by another provision of the bill the Secretary of War has jurisdiction of the harbor there.

Mr. KEAN. I do not object to the bill. However, I do not think it is a very good bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA TERMINAL AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the next bill on the Calendar, the bill (S. 6925) for the relief of the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company, be placed on the Calendar under Rule 9.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I trust we may have a vote on the joint resolution.

Mr. DICK. At the request of my colleague I must enter an objection to a vote being taken. My colleague is detained from the Senate by illness, and he desires to be heard on a substitute to the pending measure. I ask, therefore, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KEAN. Of course, if the Senator from Ohio desires to be heard further, no one will be more willing to grant that request than I.

Mr. DICK. I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPEALS FROM DISTRICT COURT OF ALASKA.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13649) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit.

Mr. FLINT. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from California.

Mr. PILES. I am sorry to do it, but I am compelled to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLINT and Mr. KEAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. PILES. I ask for a division.

Mr. FRYE, Mr. McLAURIN, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. PILES. Very well; I will call up the bill later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not agreed to. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 20, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider and pass the bill (S. 6235) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," approved February 16, 1899, and the act amendatory thereof approved March 2, 1895, which I send to the Clerk's desk. I will couple with that a request to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the bill and then to pass it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to any requests that come coupled with two things—unanimous consent for consideration and passage. I do not object to unanimous consent if it is a fairly good bill, but that new formula is such an astonishing one that I feel constrained to object to it.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment. Of course if unanimous consent is given to consider the bill, then we have a roll call. I would not press this bill to a roll call. It is a bill the passage of which is desired by one of the Departments—the Pension Bureau—which has about 30 tons of useless paper that they want to destroy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman will modify his request, I will not object to it.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not want to have a roll call.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will not call the roll.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered at this time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have about twenty minutes of time in which to make a few remarks.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I can not consent to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MISCELLANEOUS INDIAN BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is pending on suspending the rules and passing the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes, as amended, on which question the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum. The Door-keeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended. The Clerk will call the roll.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House for a few moments on the question of an anti-injunction measure at the present session of Congress, and I send the following clipping, taken from the Washington Post, to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEMAND INJUNCTION BILL—SEVERAL HOUSE REPUBLICANS THREATEN TO ORGANIZE A REVOLT—DECLARE THEY WILL JOIN WITH DEMOCRATS TO BLOCK ADJOURNMENT IF ACTION IS DENIED.

The managers of the House of Representatives have another revolt on their hands. Yesterday a delegation composed of Representatives TOWNSEND of Michigan, HAYES of California, MADISON of Kansas, and POLLARD of Nebraska waited on Speaker CANNON and, it is reported, told him that if an anti-injunction bill was not reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and an opportunity given to vote upon it, they and others would join the Democrats to prevent an adjournment.

The delegation was backed up by a petition signed by forty Republican Members pledging themselves to take this action. It developed yesterday that the revolt among Republicans against the determination of the leaders to adjourn Congress without passing a bill to regulate the issuance of injunctions has been growing for several days. The insurgents have held numerous conferences, and it was agreed Saturday night to hand around the petition and test the temper of the Republicans. The result was beyond their most sanguine expectations.

Whether this revolt will disappear under the application of the party whip remains to be seen. The leaders have been faced with it so unexpectedly that plans for its suppression have not been arranged. There are, perhaps, not more than a dozen Republicans who favor the Pearre injunction bill, which is the one endorsed by organized labor, but there are quite a number who believe there should be a measure of some sort enacted before adjournment. On the other hand, there is a tremendous sentiment among business men bitterly hostile—

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not relevant to the subject under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make that point. I desire to make a few pacific remarks—

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi has just exhausted twenty minutes in having read the report which was known on that side was utterly useless. Nobody gave any attention to it, and consequently, having exhausted that time, I make the point of order that the discussion must be relevant to the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that if you are willing to pass an anti-injunction bill, we are ready this morning or at any other time.

Mr. GILLETTE. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Texas may be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will be very candid, and state that I do not desire to discuss the bill, but do desire to speak in favor of an anti-injunction bill, and believe that it ought to be passed at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the rule. If the point is made, the gentleman must discuss the subject under consideration.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will ask unanimous consent that the rule be suspended, inasmuch as all rules seem to be suspended, and that I be allowed to address the House for ten minutes.

Mr. GILLETTE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield back my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yesterday morning the Chair ruled that a motion to suspend the rules suspended all rules. If that is true, the gentleman is within his rights.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the fact that each ruling must be consistent. To say that all rules of the House touching the preservation of order, touching debate, are suspended would be an illogical and, it seems to the Chair, a silly ruling and would throw the House into chaos.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. On the proposition of order before the House, it seems to me that when the gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass this bill it would also suspend rules authorizing him to make a point of order against my addressing the House on this or any other matter.

The SPEAKER. If that principle was good, it would suspend all rules for the preservation of order and even suspend the twenty-minute rule for debate. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the ten minutes, or as much as I have left, to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I suppose that all of the ten minutes would be left, inasmuch as I have not been allowed to address the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETTE] desire to consume any of his time?

Mr. GILLETTE. Not at present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HACKNEY].

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, amendment numbered 245 is one that has been discussed a great deal by individual Members, and especially those Members representing mining constituencies. There has been some question raised as to the sufficiency of the language of that amendment to cover what is practically the unanimous desire of the Members of this House.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to state that, in the RECORD, which the gentleman may have read, where it is said that $25,000 was appropriated to salaries, it is wrong. It should be $50,000.

Mr. HACKNEY. My attention has been called to that. Unfortunately, I see the same mistake has been made both in the Senate and in the House.

Mr. BURLESON. The correction has been made.

Mr. HACKNEY. The appropriation carried by that amendment is $150,000, the purpose being for investigating mining disasters and to determine the cause of explosions in mines. When the sundry civil bill was submitted to the House under the five-minute rule in the Committee of the Whole, I made a point of order against an appropriation of $50,000 for the investigation of these mine explosions, for the reason that I deemed that amount to be wholly inadequate to the importance of the work and insufficient to carry on the work properly.

As I look at it, that $50,000 would be as good as thrown away, because it could not be hoped that this important problem, so vital to the mining industries throughout the land, so vital to the preservation of life and property, should be determined with that meager appropriation. That amendment was stricken out of the sundry civil bill on a point of order, and this amendment, originally $195,000 in the Senate, is reduced to $150,000 by the conferees. In my judgment the amount of $150,000 is sufficient to carry on this work—at least to get the work well started, and the limitation on the salaries is, I think, a very proper one, because no one wants the appropriation to be eaten up in salaries of men employed by the Government to do the work. They have under the limitations here fixed the $50,000 for salaries and $100,000 for the work of experimentation.

Now, then, the only question is Where can this work be carried on? It is the understanding of the Members of the House, and I think we ought to print it in the RECORD, that we adopt this amendment with the understanding that this experiment work may be carried on by the Government wheresoever the Government officials deem it proper to carry it on. This amendment reads:

For continuing the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1901, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories and in the district of Alaska.

That is one part, but here is the second part:

And for conducting investigations as to the causes of mine explosions, with a view to increasing safety in mining, to be immediately available, $150,000, etc.

Now, then, I think it is the desire of this House and the other body as well, from talking with members of that body, that this appropriation shall be used by the Government in carrying on this investigation anywhere, wheresoever they feel it may be carried on in order that the cause of these horrible explosions shall be determined, and properly determined, scientifically; otherwise I would be opposed to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like the gentleman to state what his attitude is toward this amendment. Does he not think that $150,000 is better than nothing?

Mr. HACKNEY. That is what I said. This amount is adequate. Of course, $195,000 would be a little bit better. I was opposed to the adoption of the proposition for $50,000, as offered in the House, for the reasons just stated. It is very necessary, in order to solve this vexed problem, that there should be a thorough investigation, and if it can be thoroughly done I believe the cause of explosions will be discovered; if so, it will be the greatest boon to humanity coming from any scientific investigation for many years. I hope the amendment will be adopted and the conference report agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY].

Mr. CHANEY. The amendment that has been put into the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing for an investigation of mining accidents, and so forth, as it is now amended by the committee, is:

For continuing the work authorized by the act, approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories and in the district of Alaska, and for conducting investigations as to the causes of mine explosions with a view to increasing safety in mining, to be immediately available, $150,000, of which sum not more than $50,000 may be used for salaries.

This leaves $100,000, at all events, for the investigation of this great subject. The great loss of life that has occurred in the last few years throughout the country admonishes us of the necessity of some scientific investigation into the causes of these catastrophes. When human life is at stake there ought to be no obstacle put in the way of ascertaining in the best possible way the causes of the trouble concerning which the legislation is desired. My friend on the other side [Mr. HACKNEY] stated that he hoped this would extend the investigation wheresoever necessary, that it should not be confined to the Territories and the district of Alaska. This would not necessarily confine the investigation to the Territories and the district of Alaska. By this language it is authorized that these investigations of mine explosions may be conducted wherever necessary in a way necessary to ascertain their causes. This would enable them to investigate mine accidents in States for the purpose of helping out mines which may be in the district of Alaska or the Territories of the United States, and for that purpose cover mines anywhere, and where explosions occur anywhere. The Interior Department will feel authorized, with the language here given, to extend their investigations to all mines where dangerous conditions prevail and under conditions where it is possible to ascertain the causes of those great disasters.

As to the $150,000 being sufficient for the work, I am quite sure that it is, because it always takes some time to install an investigation such as this and to marshal the necessary force and equipment to conduct it. I am sure that this amount is sufficient to start with. I believe if it were possible to get legislation by which a regular bureau might be authorized to take this matter up at once in a systematic way it would be still better, but I am sure that this authority given to employ such persons and appoint such persons as are necessary, in order to make these investigations through scientific channels, it will be done almost as well as if by a regularly appointed bureau under an act of Congress. I think it will finally result in a bureau being given absolute charge of this work, especially if it is found necessary that it shall continue for any great length of time. I believe, too, that these duties will continue as long as mining continues.

Those who live in coal-mining districts believe that it is necessary that there shall be some investigation into these great disasters without delay.

In the hearings before the committee on the bills introduced for the establishment of a bureau of mines and mining a great deal of testimony was taken, and the testimony given by those witnesses was all to the effect that it was not possible to ascertain by any known means or by any expenditure of money on their part what were the causes of many of the explosions which have occurred. They therefore recommended that a study of the subject be had in a thoroughly systematic way, by persons who would be competent to discover the causes of mine disasters, so as to advise the men who have charge of the various coal-mining enterprises in the interest of the preservation of human life.

It was also testified by these men that it was hardly possible for any one State to take up the subject by itself, as it would be desultory, and could not be productive of such results as by the Government, whose findings would serve all the States at once. The investigation made by the Government would serve as a model for investigations by the State and would enable all the States to profit by the investigation; and yet it is not intended that the State shall be excused from the duty of making such an investigation as it might be able to make, but that this Government investigation should cooperate and supplement each in its scope and ability to work toward accurate knowledge of the causes by which many a worthy miner has lost his life. At the best coal mining is hazardous, and we should not hesitate to provide protection in this great and honorable occupation. I believe that this appropriation will meet the demands of the situation, and I trust that the Geological Survey will not delay in getting to the work authorized by the appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the other day when the sundry civil bill was under consideration I regretted very much that I felt it my duty to object to the proposition for $50,000 for the investigation of mine explosions offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHANEY]. I recognized then, as does every Member of this House, that he is as ardently in favor of this investigation as anybody.

My purpose in making the objection, however, was to see if we could not secure a larger amount on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, then in conference, the conference report upon which we are now considering. I have examined with great care the language of this provision. I was told that as reported by the conferees the appropriation was limited to the investigation of accidents in the Territories and Alaska. I do not so read the language in this amendment, and for that reason I shall support the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts to adopt the conference report and pass the bill.

The first part of the language provides that the appropriation is available for the continuing of the work authorized by the act approved March 3, 1891, and for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories and the district of Alaska. Then follows this language:

And for conducting investigations as to the causes of mine explosions with a view to increase the safety in mining, to be immediately available $150,000.

Unquestionably that will permit the use of this sum for the investigation of the causes of mine explosions generally; in other words, permit the money to be used for the very purpose that we desire it. I wish, however, to say at this time one other thing. The other day the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. TAWNEY, said that I wished first an appropriation of $125,000. I told him my recollection was that I wanted $180,000. Since that time I have examined the reports on which I then acted, and find that my recollection was exactly correct. The Geological Survey estimated as necessary for this work $120,000 for the purpose of establishing a plant, and $60,000 for the purpose of conducting the investigation.

Acting upon that, I asked to be permitted to amend the bill by inserting the sum of $180,000. When the bill reached the Senate, under the rule there obtaining, the Senate placed on the bill $195,000 for this purpose. The conferees agreed on $150,000. When I found that out, I asked the Geological Survey people whether they have submitted any new estimates, and was told that at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations they had submitted an estimate of $173,000 for nine months' of work, or a three-quarters of a year estimate. That was what the conferees had before them, the sum of $173,000 for nine months' expenditure. Therefore, when the next session of Congress comes, I shall ask this House to supplement this appropriation by increasing it to the original sum of $180,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the gentlemen who, when the sundry civil bill was before the House and a provision came up to investigate explosions in coal mines, objected to the appropriation being limited to $50,000. I did so at that time because I felt assured that the amount that it was proposed to appropriate then would not be adequate and could not accomplish the purposes desired. This bill now carries an appropriation of $150,000 for the purpose of investigating explosions in coal mines, and limits the amount of salaries to be paid to $25,000. I think a great deal of good can be accomplished by this appropriation. We do not want scientific papers written by college professors on the subject. We can get those without Government pay. They can be found in the ordinary monthly magazines at various times. What we really need in this country is an earnest and continuous investigation of the subject for the protection of the men who earn their living by delving in the ground. We need original research, and that requires machinery, it requires tools, it requires a large expenditure to accomplish that purpose, and not only an expenditure in one year, but it will take years and years of work to accomplish any real, definite results which would bring about improved methods of mining in this country.

These experiments will not only be of very great value to the miner, a great protection to his life, but they will be of great benefit to the mine owner and operator, because they will protect his property, and a very large portion of the people of the United States are greatly interested in the matter. I shall favor agreeing to this conference report and shall favor this amendment, but I am free to say that I am not entirely satisfied in reference to the matter. I do not think the language contained in the report is broad enough to make the necessary investigations to the full extent desired, but I believe and hope that if we adopt the amendment to-day and start on with the work, in the future we can broaden the scope of the investigation and can increase the amount of the appropriation, so that ultimately we can carry on to the full extent the investigations that are desired and that are necessary. I am not in favor of limiting this investigation merely to an appropriation and to a Department to carry on incidentally. I am heartily in favor of this House passing the bill in favor of the creation of a Bureau of Mines. I do not think we can really accomplish the results desired with any legislation this side of the proposition of establishing a permanent Bureau of Mines. There is some objection to this proposition from gentlemen who say that that is a question for the States to deal with. Have we regarded it as a question for the States to deal with when we originally established the Agricultural Bureau, and when we went on further and made the Agricultural Bureau a Department of state, and instead of a Commissioner of Agriculture we made a Cabinet officer?

The question of mines and mining may not be of interest to as many people in this country as the question of agriculture, but, to say the least, it is second to the great agricultural development of this country, and the people who are engaged in mining in this country are as much entitled to those investigations that the Government can make in their interest as are the people in the country who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. We are spending a good many millions of dollars every year toward developing agriculture, toward investigations that will improve agriculture, that will make it more profitable to those engaged in that occupation and more beneficial to the masses of the people of the country. It is purely a scientific question, and the investigations are along scientific lines. Now, one of the other great fields of industry in this country is mining. Why should not we carry on that same class of investigation in the fields of mining that we carry on in the fields of agriculture? It is absolutely necessary to those people engaged in mining that we should do so. If you leave this matter of investigation only to the States, the fields are too narrow, the opportunity for investigation is not great enough. The single States can not afford to expend the necessary money for a clear and full investigation.

In other words, to investigate the mere question of mine explosions it is necessary to build a tunnel, to build an artificial mine, to go through the performance of having mine explosions, and it costs a good many hundred thousand dollars to accomplish that result. Are you going to say that each one of the forty-six States in the Union should establish an artificial mine, to go to this expense, when all the investigations can be done by one artificial mine and by one experiment? It is clearly a case for experimental purposes, and it is better for the National Government to make the investigation. There is no question about the constitutional authority. If you deny the constitutional authority of the Federal Government to make these investigations, you must deny its constitutional authority to make investigations in reference to all branches of the Agricultural Department. Is there a man on this floor who at this day and time is prepared to deny the right of the Agricultural Department to make scientific investigations for the development of agriculture? Well, if there is not, and there is not a man who would rise and deny that proposition, then where can the man come from who will deny the proposition that the Federal Government has a right to investigate these questions of mine explosions and mine development?

If one is right, if one is constitutional, the other is right and the other is constitutional, and therefore I say if this Congress adjourns with a bill pending here on the Calendar to create a Bureau of Mines without enacting that law on the statute books, that this Congress will be derelict in its duty to this great mass of people who, through the several States, are engaged in mining and interested in the products of mines. [Applause.] I say that it is our duty to stay here; it is our duty not alone to pass this appropriation bill, but to insist on passing a bill that will create a Bureau of Mines. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion of the provision included in the conference report on the legislative bill regarding an investigation of mine explosions, and some statements have been made that the amount appropriated is intended only to cover the expenses incident to that investigation during the next eight months. I want to say to the Members of the House that the $150,000 carried in this provision is not only intended to cover the expense incident to the investigation during the eight months, but throughout the next fiscal year, and it is believed that under the limitation of the language in that provision, as agreed to between the conferees on the part of the two Houses, it will be sufficient to go a long way toward completing the investigation.

The provision as it was originally reported to the Senate and as it passed that body contemplated, not an investigation of mine explosions or the cause of mine explosions alone, but

It also authorized the investigation of the method of mining, with a view of improving the efficiency of mining as well as safety in mining. That was practically an unlimited field upon which the Geological Survey could engage if authorized to do so by the adoption of that provision, but under the language of the provision carried now the authority exists only for an investigation of the cause of mine explosions, the necessity for information concerning which is what gave rise to the demand for this legislation, and the House conferees did not feel justified in creating the authority for making investigations outside of the cause of mine explosions, or that would give the Geological Survey an opportunity to create a permanent organization to go into the business and methods of mining for the purpose of improving efficiency in mining throughout the United States. This service will be temporary because, when the investigation into the causes of mine explosions have been completed and the cause of mine explosions ascertained, if that cause can ever be ascertained, there will be no longer any necessity for the service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Minnesota allow me to ask a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is well aware that in European countries where these investigations have been made that it has cost hundreds of thousands of dollars—I may say millions of dollars—to make them, and that they have been engaged in that business for years and years past. Now, does the gentleman expect in eight months or a year's time, with a limited appropriation of this amount, to come to the end of such an investigation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not. I suppose that the time will extend beyond a year, but in any event the expense is not going to be anything near what it would have been had the broad authority originally given to the Geological Survey been included in the final agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may have misunderstood what the gentleman said, but what I wanted to understand from his language was whether, as chairman of this committee, he expected the appropriation for this work to be limited to this single appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. The expenditures to which the gentleman referred as having been made in other countries were made likely by private owners of mines. There has been a vast amount of money expended in the United States for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of these mine explosions and there always will be a great deal of money expended in that direction, but so far as the Government's duty in the matter goes, if it has any duty at all, it is limited to ascertaining as far as it possibly can these causes and make them known to those interested. Beyond the original scientific research work necessary to accomplish this result the Government of the United States can not go and the Geological Survey should not be allowed to go.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent the greatest coal and coke district in the world, and, representing such a district, I am naturally very much interested and my people are very much interested in the adoption of such methods and the taking of such precautions as will prevent as many of the mine explosions and mine accidents as possible.

With this matter in view, and mindful of some of the mine disasters that have recently occurred in our mines, I wrote to the chief of the bureau of mines in Pennsylvania recently for a report as to the number of mining accidents that they have had in Pennsylvania within the last ten years, together with the cause. Now, in my home county last year we mined almost 29,000,000 tons of coal and we made about 14,500,000 tons of coke. The State of Pennsylvania produced 149,559,047 tons of bituminous coal and over 76,000,000 tons of anthracite coal, making a total of 226,395,129 tons of coal mined in Pennsylvania last year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the Record the table sent me by the chief of the department of mines of Pennsylvania, giving the number of mining disasters and the causes thereof for the past ten years, and to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. By reference to the foregoing table it will be observed that the number of fatal mine accidents in Pennsylvania increased from 200 in the bituminous mining districts of Pennsylvania in 1898 to 806 in 1907, and from 411 in the anthracite district in 1898 to 708 in 1907, or a total of 1,514 deaths in the State for the year 1907, to say nothing of the much larger number of accidents which did not result fatally. This large number of deaths and injuries in one State alone and the rapid increase of the number of fatal accidents should impress upon everyone the urgent necessity for the adoption of some means of prevention and avoiding this terrible slaughter of the miners in this country. As the mining operations grow older and the workings are extended the danger of accident from gas and other causes naturally increases. The extension of the investigation to the mining operations of the country generally, as is proposed by the amendment to this bill, instead of limiting it to the Territories and Alaska, as originally proposed, is of the greatest importance.

The vast majority of the men employed in and about coal mines are in the several States, and it is necessary that everything that can be done shall be done to safeguard the lives of these people. It is important that the Federal Government shall conduct full investigations into the conditions and dangers surrounding the mining operations, so that it may be most scientific and comprehensive and the information gathered may be thoroughly disseminated throughout the country. The causes and means of preventing these accidents should be understood by both operator and miner. The more knowledge there is on these subjects the better will be the observance of the necessary precautions to avoid accident. And the investigations and recommendations of the Federal Government will do much to bring about uniformity throughout the country of necessary legislation and respectful observance of the same to insure the greatest degree of safety possible. This appropriation is a step in the right direction and will, I believe, lead to great good.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the subject of mines and mining is interesting and attracting more people now than at any time before in the history of the country. Mining is one of the great industries of the United States. Every year men who have not before been engaged in mining go into the mines in great numbers and take that up as the work of their lives. It is all important to the people who work in the mines as miners or as helpers in this great industry that every precaution be taken for the safety of the men employed in the mines and of the property employed in mining. I am glad that the conferees have reached a conclusion in this matter and are appropriating $150,000 to provide for an investigation as to the causes of the great disasters that have occurred within the last few years in the mines of this country. We have more mine disasters in the mines of the United States than in any other country where mines are operated.

There must be some hidden and unknown cause for these great disasters. The causes ought to be ascertained if within the power of science to do so. If it is within the possible scope of a scientific investigation to ascertain these causes, the matter of expense ought not to stand in the way. If it can not be accomplished with the appropriation made in this bill, an additional appropriation should be made, so that there shall be the greatest possible guaranty to those who go into the mines as a work of life that they shall have the greatest possible safety in the performance of their duty. The provision in this bill undoubtedly permits the use of this money in the States as well as in the Territories. If I thought it did not, I should not agree to this report, and I would urge the conferees to take the matter up again and so construct the language of the provision that it would enable those making the investigation to go into the States of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, West Virginia, Kansas, Ohio, and of every other State where mining is an industry, and pursue their investigations there and ascertain the causes in the several mining districts where the great disasters occur. I hope the amendment and report will be agreed to.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, everything that has been said has been in favor of the adoption of this report. No opposition has developed, and therefore I assume that the House favors it, and I think it would be unwise for me to endanger its success by advocating it. Therefore I ask for a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 229, nays 6, answered "present" 8, not voting 144, as follows:

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Special Committee on the Distribution of Rooms, and I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] presents a privileged report and asks unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. It is a special report from the Committee on the Distribution of Rooms, and simply provides for the resolution under which space in the Office Building will be hereafter provided and the rooms assigned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought that it had already been agreed to.

Mr. MANN. That was a simple resolution of the House, but that would not last after the expiration of the end of the term of the House, and it is necessary, if anything be done, to put it in the form of a joint resolution so it would be permanent law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It carries out the original plan?

Mr. BURLESON. No departure from it?

Mr. MANN. No departure from the original plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that this is merely a request to print in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

The special committee which was directed to report to the House plans for the distribution of rooms in the House Office Building, and the redistribution of rooms under the control of the House in the Capitol building, beg leave to report and to recommend the adoption of the following joint resolution, to wit:

"That the assignment of rooms in the Office Building of the House of Representatives, which shall hereafter be designated as the House Office Building, heretofore made by resolution or order of the House of Representatives, shall continue in force until modified or changed in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, and the room so assigned to any Representative shall continue to be held by such Representative as his individual office room so long as he shall remain a Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the provisions of this resolution, and no Representative shall allow his office room to be used for any other purpose.

"Any Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives may file with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds a request in writing that any individual office room be assigned to him whenever it shall become vacant. If only one such request has been made for any room which shall at any time have become vacant, the room shall be assigned as requested. If two or more requests are made for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the Representative making the request who has been longest in continuous service as a Member and Member-elect of the House of Representatives. If two or more Representatives with equal length of continuous service, or two or more Representatives-elect make request for the same room, preference shall be given to the one first preferring his request. A Representative or Representative-elect making request for the assignment of a vacant room may withdraw the same at any time and no one shall have pending at the same time more than one such request. The assignment of a new room to a Representative, upon his request, or the appointment of any Representative having an individual office room as chairman of a committee having a committee room, shall act as a relinquishment by him of the room previously assigned to him.

"Representatives having rooms assigned to them in the foregoing manner may exchange rooms one with another, but such exchange shall be valid only so long as both Members making the exchange shall remain continuously Members or Members-elect of the House of Representatives.

"The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall keep a record of the assignment of rooms heretofore or hereafter made, exchanges which may be made, requests for vacant rooms which may be filed, and the assignment thereof, which record shall be open for the inspection of Representatives or Representatives-elect of the House.

"In the matter of the assignment of rooms under this resolution, Delegates in Congress and the Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall be treated the same as Representatives.

"The assignment and reassignment of the rooms and other space in the House Office Building shall be subject to the control of the House of Representatives by rule, resolution, order, or otherwise. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed to affect or repeal the provisions of law heretofore enacted placing said House Office Building under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the approval and direction of the Commissions provided for, respectively, in the act of March 3, 1903, and the act of March 4, 1907.

"Unoccupied space in said building shall be assigned by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds under the direction of the Commission and subject to the control of the House of Representatives."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES R. MANN.
JOSEPH H. GAINES,
H. O. YOUNG,
JAMES T. LLOYD,
W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

"SEC. 464. That before any license is granted, as provided in this act in relation to intoxicating liquor, it shall be shown to the satisfaction of said court that a majority of the white male and female citizens over the age of 21 years, other than Indians, within 2 miles of the place where intoxicating liquor is to be manufactured, bartered, sold, and exchanged or bartered, sold, and exchanged, have, in good faith, consented to the manufacture, barter, sale, and exchange or the barter, sale, and exchange of the same; and the burden shall be upon the applicant or applicants to show to the satisfaction of said court that a majority of the white male citizens of 21 years of age or more have consented thereto, and no license shall be granted in the absence of such evidence: Provided, That no license shall be granted for the manufacture, barter, sale, or exchange of intoxicating liquors except within incorporated towns, and such other towns, settlements, or communities in which a duly appointed United States commissioner or deputy marshal shall reside, except that the respective district judges may in their discretion grant licenses at regularly established road houses to the keeper of said road houses on main traveled post-roads and post trails in the district: And provided, That when it is made to appear that a majority of said white male and female citizens over the age of 21 years, other than Indians, of any one place have consented to the manufacture, barter, sale, and exchange or the barter, sale, and exchange of intoxicating liquor, no further proof of the consent of the citizens of the place where such intoxicating liquor is to be manufactured, bar-tered, sold, and exchanged or bartered, sold, and exchanged, will be required for twelve months thereafter.

"Sec. 405. That every person applying for a license to sell intoxicating liquors in said district shall file with the clerk of the court a petition for such license, verified by the applicant's oath, and such petition shall be considered and acted upon by the court in the order in which the same was filed and numbered. Said petition shall contain:

"First. The name and residence of the applicant, and how long said applicant has resided there.

"Second. The particular place for which license is desired, designating the same by reference to street, locality, or settlement in such manner that the exact location at which such sale of liquor is proposed may be clearly and definitely determined from the description given.

"Third. The statement that said applicant is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such; that said applicant is not less than 21 years of age, and that such applicant has not been, since the passage of this act, adjudged guilty of violating the laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquors or laws for the prevention of crime in said district.

"Fourth. That said applicant intends to, and if so licensed will, carry on such business for himself and not as agent for any other person.

"Fifth. That said applicant intends to, and if so licensed will, superintend in person the management of the business licensed.

"Sixth. That said applicant will not conduct, maintain, or permit the maintenance of any gambling, dance hall, or bawdy house on or in connection with the premises, nor permit any female or minor in or about the rooms where liquor is sold or served.

"That if any false material statement is made in any part of such petition or affidavit the petitioner or petitioners shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof said license shall be revoked and said licensee shall be subject to the penalties provided by law for the crime of perjury.

"That should it appear to the district judge that any of the statements above enumerated, required to be made in the petition, are untrue at the time of application for such license, such application shall be denied.

"That should it appear to the district judge, after the granting of any such license, that any of the statements above enumerated required to be made in the petition are untrue, or that the applicant is permitting any of the things to be done or exist on or about the premises contrary to the statements required in the petition, it shall be the duty of such judge to forthwith enter an order revoking such license, and all license moneys deposited by the applicant shall be thereby forfeited, and it shall be the duty of the United States marshals and their deputies and the United States attorneys and their deputies in said district to investigate and report to the district judge any violations of any of the provisions of this section: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to prevent any innkeeper or any person operating a hotel in good faith from receiving as guests women and minors.

"Sec. 468. That the liquor licenses authorized and provided for by this act shall be of two classes, namely, wholesale and barroom. Every applicant for a license shall deposit the amount of the license fee with the clerk of the court at the time of filing his application therefor; and if upon consideration of such application by the court, as provided for in this act, the court shall determine to grant the license prayed for, it shall notify the clerk of the court and the applicant in writing and the applicant shall thereupon receive his license.

"That the fee for a wholesale license shall be $2,000 per annum, and for a barroom or retail license $1,000 per annum: Provided, That the fee for a retail license for road houses on regular post roads or trails where the population within 2 miles of the place where the business is to be conducted does not exceed fifty people, or for a steamboat or steamer operating on the inland rivers of Alaska during the season of open navigation, shall be $500 per annum: Provided, That said steamboat or steamer shall not be authorized to sell intoxicating liquor while in port or dock: And provided, That the words 'towns, camps, or settlements,' as used in this act shall be construed to embrace the population within a radius of 2 miles of the place wherein the business is to be conducted under the license.

"That a retail or barroom license shall be required for every hotel, tavern, boat, barroom, or other place in which intoxicating liquors are sold at retail.

"That a wholesale license shall only authorize the licensee to sell distilled, malt, or fermented liquors, wines, and cordials in quantities not less than 4 gallons, not to be drunk upon the premises where sold; and no such license shall be granted until it is satisfactorily shown that the place where it is intended to carry on such business is properly arranged for selling such liquor as merchandise.

"That every place where distilled, malt, or fermented wines, liquors, or cordials are sold in quantities as prescribed for retail dealers by section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to be drunk upon the premises, shall be regarded as a barroom; and the possession of malt, distilled, fermented, or any other intoxicating liquors, with the means and appliances for carrying on the business of dispensing the same to be drunk where sold, shall be prima facie evidence of a barroom within the meaning of this act, and the license therefor shall be known as a barroom license: Provided, That no license shall be granted for the sale of liquors at either wholesale or retail in any other than a substantial building which shall have cost for construction not less than $500."

"Sec. 9. That section 142 of said act of March 3, 1899, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 142. That if any person shall, without the authority of the United States, or some authorized officer thereof, sell, barter, or give to any Indian or half-breed who lives and associates with Indians, any spirituous, malt, or vinous liquor or intoxicating extracts, such person shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not to exceed two years.

"That the term 'Indian' in this act shall be construed to include the aboriginal races inhabiting Alaska when annexed to the United States, and their descendants of the whole or half blood.

"That section 1955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and all that part of section 14 of 'An act providing a civil government for Alaska,' approved May 17, 1884, after the word 'provided,' is hereby repealed."

"Sec. 10. That this act shall take effect upon the expiration of one hundred and twenty days after its approval.

"Sec. 11. That it shall be unlawful for any person to practice medicine or surgery, or any of the departments thereof, within the Territory of Alaska, until he or she shall have first obtained a license therefor as hereinafter in this act prescribed.

"Sec. 12. That no person shall receive a license to practice medicine or surgery, or any of the departments thereof, within the Territory of Alaska until he or she shall have, first, submitted a diploma issued by some legally chartered medical school authorizing the holder thereof to practice medicine or surgery, the requirements for graduation of which medical school shall have been at the time of granting said diploma in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year, or, second, submitted proof of having practiced medicine or surgery, or both, for a period of not less than five successive years continuously prior to the passage of this act and within the jurisdiction of one of the judicial districts of Alaska.

"Sec. 13. That any person desiring to obtain a license to practice medicine or surgery within the Territory of Alaska shall first make application therefor to the clerk of the court of the district in which he desires to practice. The application shall be in writing, and shall state the name of the applicant, his age, his residence, the name and location of the college whence his diploma issued, the length of time, if at all, he has practiced medicine, and where, giving specifically the names of places wherein he has so practiced medicine. The application shall be accompanied by the diploma of the applicant, or duly authenticated copy, as must also an affidavit setting forth that he or she is the person therein named, and that the diploma was procured in the regular manner after the regular course of study prescribed by the medical school granting the same, without fraud or misrepresentation.

"Sec. 14. That any applicant for license to practice medicine or surgery within the Territory of Alaska not in possession of the credentials specified in section 3 of this act may obtain a license at the discretion of the clerk of the district court to whom he applies upon furnishing a properly attested statement, to wit: That he or she is a bona fide resident of Alaska, and has been engaged in the practice of medicine exclusively and within the judicial district in which the application is filed for a period of not less than five successive years immediately prior to the passage of this act. The application shall be accompanied by the written recommendation of three bona fide residents of the judicial district wherein applicant desires to practice, one of whom must be a physician holding a license under section 3 of this act, and shall state in a general way applicant's character and professional ability.

"Sec. 15. That every person receiving a license to practice medicine and surgery within the Territory of Alaska shall have such license recorded in the office of the clerk of the court of the district wherein he is practicing, or proposes to practice, within thirty days from date of issuance. And when such licensee moves into another district for the purpose of continuing the practice of medicine, he shall first file for record with the clerk of the court of the district to which he moves a certified copy of the license.

"Sec. 16. That any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine within the meaning of this act who shall within the Territory of Alaska append the letters M. D. to his name, or who shall prescribe or administer drugs, medicines, electricity, magnetism, hydrotherapy, or perform any operation or manipulation, or apply any apparatus or appliance for the cure, alleviation, correction, or reduction of any human disease, ill, deformity, defect, wound, or injury, including midwifery, for hire, fee, compensation, or reward, promised, offered, or accepted, directly or indirectly. That if the company shall be unable to furnish power or light applied for by reason of lack of capacity of the plant or apparatus for producing and transmitting electric current, the company shall be allowed a reasonable time, not exceeding one year from the date of any application, to procure such additional improvements or apparatus as may be necessary to furnish such applicant or applicants.

"Sec. 3. The officials or boards having charge of said streets or roads are hereby authorized to make, and from time to time change, amend, or add to, reasonable rules regulating the placing of poles, wires, the insulation of wires and apparatus carrying the electric current, and the excavation of conduits, and the maintenance in good repair of all poles, wires, and apparatus and generally concerning the manufacture and supply of electricity which may be necessary for the public safety and welfare.

"Sec. 5. That the entire plant, lines, poles, and all other apparatus and equipment shall, at all times, be subject and open to the inspection of the officials or boards having charge of said streets or roads, or any officer appointed by them for that purpose.

"Sec. 6. The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURRIER). Is a second demanded?

Mr. LLOYD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands a second. A second is ordered under the rule. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this is an omnibus bill relating to affairs in the Territories. It comprehends several bills which have been reported unanimously from the Committee on the Territories. Sections 1 to 6 of the bill relate to a proposition to permit the town of Valdez, in Alaska, to issue bonds for the purpose of protecting itself from the Valdez glacier. Section 7 relates to the care of the insane in Alaska, and involves certain necessary legislation.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to a slight clerical error, and I ask unanimous consent that an amendment be incorporated in line 25, page 3:

After the word "paid" insert the words "from appropriations to be made for such service upon estimates to be submitted to the Congress annually." Strike out the words "by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on accounts and vouchers duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior." I ask unanimous consent that the change be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 3 and 4, beginning on line 25, page 3, strike out the words "by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on account and vouchers duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "from appropriations to be made for such service upon estimates to be submitted to Congress annually."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Sections 8 to 10 relate to the regulation of the liquor traffic in Alaska. The present law provides that in towns of 1,500 or upward there shall be a license of $1,500; in towns of more than 1,000 and less than 1,500 population, $1,000, and in towns, camps, or settlements of less than 1,000 population the license is $500. This bill provides for a flat thousand-dollar license. The committee, after careful consideration of this measure, have come to the conclusion that it ought to pass.

Sections 11 to 20, of the bill, provide for the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska. There is no law now regulating the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska, and it will be apparent to the Members of the House that there should be some regulation of the practice of those professions in that Territory. Natives and people generally are being operated upon by some who have skill and by some who have no skill; and it is advisable that there should be some regulation.

Section 21 relates to some matters in Mohave County, Ariz., and I call upon the Delegate from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] to make some explanation of that part of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, all the bills consolidated in this measure have been favorably reported by the committee, and several of the Arizona ones have already passed the Senate and are now upon the Speaker's table. There is only one thing in them that may cause trouble and that is in the Yuma County court-house provision. I would ask unanimous consent to insert, on page 18, at the end of line 14, the words "to the extent of $50,000 and no more." That bill was originally a bill from the Arizona legislature, providing for the erection of a court-house and jail in the county of Yuma, to be paid for out of the funds of the county of Yuma. We are forced to come to Congress under the Harrison Act for all this remedial legislation. The local legislature passed a law for $75,000. The Senate amended it by reducing the amount to $50,000, and in order to avoid any conflict between the Houses over that item, I prefer that the House, by unanimous consent, permit me to have the bill amended to that extent, which would limit it to $50,000. I would much prefer the bill as our legislature passed it, but I know the Senate will defeat the item unless this amendment is adopted. It is with reluctance that I make this motion, but it is better than nothing and it is all I can get.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, at the end of line 14, insert:
"To the extent of $50,000, and no more."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will say to the House that the remainder of these Arizona provisions are acts of the legislature of the Territory, merely asking confirmation here. There has been no objection raised in the committees; there has been some in the Senate on some of these bills, but those to which objection was made have not yet passed the Senate. The one I have had amended is the only one, I presume, that would cause any trouble in the matter, and that is now out of the way by reason of the amendment which I have offered.

It is true the Senate committee has not favorably reported the Gila County court-house bill, but it was passed by that committee for further proceedings at the next session of Congress, or, in other words, "laid aside" for future action.

The Phoenix bond bill has not passed the Senate, nor has it yet been reported to the Senate favorably by the Committee on Territories, to which it was referred. The Maricopa County road bill has been favorably reported by the House committee, and the bill has been introduced in the Senate and is now pending before the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KIMBALL].

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I would be opposed to legislation of this character—a bill including fifteen bills in one—but there can be no reasonable or potent objection urged against the bill on the grounds that would naturally provoke antagonism to it. Every one of the bills sought to be passed under this omnibus menu has been thrashed out and investigated carefully by the Committee on Territories and reported unanimously to this House. The Territories are our orphans. They have no electoral vote; their representatives here have no vote. Nobody cares anything for them, and a great deal of the legislation necessary for the proper conduct of Territorial affairs has to be passed upon by Congress. Consequently it is very difficult for the Territories to get needed legislation.

This bill is intended to give to the various Territories legislation actually needed, and without this omnibus bill it would be impossible to pass them through this House. For instance, there can be no reasonable objection to building jails and court-houses in Arizona, and no objection to regulating the practice of medicine in Alaska or to fixing the amount of license for liquor dealers there, nor to grant an electric-light franchise in Hawaii.

I desire to explain to the House that part of the bill embraced in sections 37 and 38. These sections grant franchises to certain persons—one in the district of Walluku, county of Maui, in Hawaii, and the other in the district of Lahaina, in the same county—for the purpose of manufacturing, selling, and distributing electric light for lighting and power purposes.

I undertake to say that in no city in America has an electric-light franchise ever been granted to any corporation wherein the rights of the people are as safely guarded as in these two bills. They are small communities. The franchise is not valuable at best, and every provision is made to take care of the people. The physical effects of the concern are to be at all times open to the inspection of the various boards for control of the public highways. These franchises are revocable at any time by Congress.

There is a provision fixing the maximum rate to be charged for electricity, and any consumer aggrieved by excessive charges has the right, by petition, to have the courts say whether the rate is excessive or not. There is a provision requiring the law officers to institute proceedings for the forfeiture of the charter of these franchises if any of the provisions of this act are violated. Every precaution has been taken to protect the people, and I trust that the bill will pass without objection. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, my name has been frequently mentioned in the public press, or at least in some of the papers in the District of Columbia, for some time now, and often in private conversation among gentlemen, to the effect that I am holding up the tracks to the Union Station.

Mr. SULZER. They are not down yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. That I am preventing the people from riding in street cars to the Union Station; that there is no demand for free transfers by the people. Therefore I ask the indulgence of the House to read a few lines from Washington Post of to-day:

The Central Labor Union placed itself on record last night as favoring universal transfers on the various electric street railway lines of the District. The resolution indorsing the bill providing for transfers was introduced by Emmet L. Adams, of Columbia Lodge of Machinists, and was adopted after a long discussion. Sam De Nedrey, of Columbia Typographical Union, and James L. Feeney, of the Bookbinders' Union, were the only ones who opposed the resolution.

President Lorch, of the central body, left his chair to address the delegates in favor of the resolution.

"There is nothing more needed by the laboring men of the District than universal transfers," he said. "Hundreds of our members reside just within the District limits and are forced to pay a double fare to reach their work. This means that 20 cents daily at least is taken from the families of these laboring people and placed in the pockets of the greedy corporations. I favor trackage to the Union Station also, but believe that I am voicing the sentiments of the 50,000 union men of the District when I say that the universal transfer provision is to be preferred to any other regulation relative to the street car systems."

Secretary De Nedrey was requested to notify Representative CARY, of Wisconsin, that the central body had taken this action.

Now you know on whose side I am—that of the stockholders who have feathered their nests by legislative favor, or the people who labor and sweat to furnish the money to pay the dividends on the stocks of these unholy and unjust corporations. It seems strange to me that some of the newspapers have such favorites when it comes to dealing with franchise corporations. Some of them have pounded the gas company in season and out for lower gas rates, but when it comes to the traveling poor, who have to use these cars daily to go to their work, they say, "Sims is holding up the tracks to the station."

Yes; that is what I am doing. I am holding them up, and if I can I will hold them up until doomsday, if necessary, to force these creatures of legislative favor, who are getting unjust and unholy dividends upon treble-watered stock, to become broad and patriotic enough to notify the conferees in both Houses that they are willing to do what is right and just by those who have no vote and are unable to defend themselves against rapacity and greed. [Applause.]

To-morrow, when the conference report is considered, I call upon the Members of this House who love justice, who are willing for all people to have that which belongs to them—a just and fair compensation on their capital, but nothing more—to stand by organized labor, whose battle I have been fighting here for months, and which battle I consider to be the most honorable service I have ever rendered. I am proud to join hands with the army of labor when it comes to demanding justice from these law-made favorites, which are controlled absolutely and alone by the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the "hold up" of the Capital Traction bill just referred to by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] commands my attention. However, in the brief time at my disposal I shall not digress from the subject-matter before the House, but will confine myself to a discussion of the bill now under consideration, which presents in a more acute aspect a "hold up" not only of important remedial legislation demanded by the people, but of the fundamental rights of innumerable American citizens.

The "hold up" of meritorious bills in the interests of the people, it seems, is the order of the day in this Congress. There appears to be no trouble to pass a bad bill, but next to impossible to pass a good bill. The few are fed; the many are left to starve. It is the old, old story—everything for the few and nothing for the many. Will the special interests never be satisfied? Will the people never have their day?

The bill now before the House is one of these omnibus bills—a recent device of legislative cunning to prevent the consideration of a bill on its merits—that is to say, an omnibus bill is the grouping together in one bill of a number of little bills relating to different parts of the country and bearing no relation to each other. It affords no opportunity to correct or amend. They all go through together, or they all fail together. It saves time, shuts off debate, prevents the separation of the bad from the good, and compels a Member to vote for them all "en bloc," or against them all "en bloc." In my judgment it is an unwise and a dangerous method of legislation, and I want to record my protest against it in as strong terms as I can command.

This omnibus bill carries a number of little bills for the people of Alaska, the people of Arizona, and the people of New Mexico. I have just heard the bill read, but I can not tell much about it. So far as I am advised it may be a good omnibus bill; that is, each of the bills of which it is composed may be a good bill, but I know not. I can not tell, and I am opposed to this method of slipshod legislation. It is not good parliamentary procedure, and it borders on the dangerous.

But I am a friend of the people of Alaska, of Arizona, and of New Mexico, and I want to do all I can to protect their rights and promote their general welfare. As I understand it, this omnibus bill is a little sop thrown to them at the last moment to appease their wrath. For years these good people have been knocking at the doors of Congress for justice, for relief, for their rights, and the Congress has turned to them a deaf ear. They have asked for bread, and you give them a stone. They are American citizens, and they want the rights of American citizens. They are treated like serfs. It is all wrong. The people of New Mexico want to govern themselves. They want statehood, and they should be admitted as a State. The people of Arizona want to make their own laws. They want statehood. They should be admitted as a State. For forty years they have been begging Congress for this fundamental right, and for forty years Congress has closed to their appeals the doors of opportunity, of equal rights, of justice, and of statehood. How much longer must they beg? How much longer must they plead? How much longer must they wait? It is a shame—a denial of constitutional rights. It is a disgrace to the country and contrary to the spirit of our free institutions.

Let us stop treating Arizona and New Mexico like conquered provinces. Let us grant them the rights they demand. Let us permit these Territories to come into the Union, so that they can govern themselves and make their own local laws. These people are as brave, as honest, as intelligent, and as patriotic as any other citizens in our land. They want to govern themselves. They want home rule. They demand statehood. Let us be true to ourselves and grant them all their rights and all the privileges enjoyed by all the rest of the citizens of the States of the Union. New Mexico must be a State. Arizona must be a State. Now is the time to grant them this sovereign boon.

And, sir, what about home rule for Alaska? What about the rights of the brave and heroic people who have gone to Alaska from every State in the Union—as fine types of American manhood as ever breathed the free air of liberty? What about the bill prepared by me and introduced by Delegate CALE to grant Alaska home rule and Territorial government? The Alaskans have been appealing to Congress for years for Territorial rights, and Congress has thrown in the wastebasket the appeals of these brave pioneers who have gone there to develop the richest asset in Uncle Sam's domains. It is an outrage on the people of Alaska to deny them Territorial government. They are entitled to it and they will fight for it until they get it. Make no mistake about it.

The people of Alaska want this right to govern themselves, and sooner or later it must be granted to them. I have been to Alaska several times. I know something about that vast domain. I know something about the sentiment of the people who live there, and I stand here and declare, with the confident knowledge that I can not be successfully contradicted, that the people of Alaska—the people who have gone there, and who have lived there for years, and who are bona fide residents of Alaska, and intend to stay there during the rest of their lives—I know what they want, and I declare here that they want not only a Delegate in Congress, but they want Territorial government. They want the right that every other Territory in the Union has—the right to make their own laws, to levy their own taxes, to regulate their own internal affairs, and to spend the money gathered by the tax collector for their own use, for their own schools, for their own charitable institutions, for their own roads, for their own municipal affairs, and for their own peace and happiness. This is not asking too much, in my opinion. It seems to me it is only fair and just and proper and right. Alaska has a population at the present time upward of 65,000 bona fide residents, as true and as honest and as brave a people as ever walked the earth. They want their rights, and they are going to get their rights.

Mr. Speaker, Alaska is the world's wonderland. No words can adequately describe it. It is the poor man's and the rich man's, and the sportsman's paradise. The time, in my judgment, is at hand when this vast Territory will be developed by American genius, American capital, and American enterprise, and take my word for it, there will be no more prosperous section in all this progressive land for American brawn and American brain. Alaska is the place for the new settler—for the hustler—for the man who wants to go ahead and get on. Alaska wants her rights; she wants home rule; she demands Territorial government. Alaska wants this; Alaska must have it—Alaska with her patriotic population; Alaska with her invigorating climate; Alaska with her beautiful scenery, her magnificent distances, her towering snow-capped mountains, her majestic rivers, her fertile fields, her great industries of fish and furs and timber; Alaska with her immense agricultural possibilities; Alaska with her untold wealth in gold and copper and silver and lead and iron and coal—mineral wealth beyond the dreams of the most imaginative person in the world; Alaska with her brave and loyal and God-fearing American citizens; Alaska with her churches and schools, her splendid institutions, her towns and villages; Alaska under the blue dome of the Union sky and in the shadow of the midnight sun; Alaska with her incomparable glaciers, with her great harbors and innumerable lakes and countless cascades; Alaska, in the name of all these and by virtue of the fundamental principles of our free institutions, I demand that she shall have the right of home rule and full Territorial government.

Mr. Speaker, Congress is too big a body, too busy as a legislative forum with the momentous affairs of the nation to act as a board of aldermen for Alaska, for New Mexico, and for Arizona. Why not give them what they are entitled to, and let them legislate for themselves? The principles of local self-government are dear to the American heart. They constitute the corner stone of the American Republic. The people in Arizona, the people in New Mexico are entitled to home rule, are entitled to local self-government, and the only way they can get it is through the agency of statehood. The people of Alaska are entitled to Territorial government. They want to make their own local laws and not bother Congress, and the only way they can do so is through the agency of Territorial government. After a long fight we finally succeeded in passing a bill to give Alaska a Delegate in Congress. He is here in the person of Hon. THOMAS CALE—one of God's noblemen—and he typifies the intelligence and the industry and the patriotism of the people of Alaska, and yet what can he do here? What has he been able to accomplish for home rule? Nothing at all. He can beg and plead, and he has begged, he has pleaded, but it is all in vain. But the fight will go on and on until justice triumphs, and so I want to say in conclusion that for one, as long as I am a Member of Congress, I am going to keep on fighting for statehood for New Mexico, for statehood for Arizona, and for home rule and Territorial government for Alaska.

The Speaker. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly natural of course that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] should fight about something. There can be no possible objection to that.

I want to call the attention of the House, however, to a few facts by way of refutation of what the gentleman has said. This is the Sixtieth Congress. The Fifty-ninth Congress spent a large part of its time in the consideration of a bill to create a State out of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory and to create another State out of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Out of the consideration of that bill grew the magnificent State of Oklahoma, which we are proud of as a sister State in our Union. We have not been unmindful of the rights of Arizona and New Mexico. The rights of those Territories are splendidly represented here on this floor by their Delegates, and I understand, Mr. Speaker, that within a reasonable time application may be made by at least one of those Territories for consideration of her claim to statehood. Meanwhile all of the interests of those Territories that come before the Committee on Territories are carefully considered, and the Delegates representing the Territories, who are authorized to speak for those Territories, know about this.

I do not care to consume further time, Mr. Speaker, except to say that the Delegate from Alaska knows that nothing that he has asked for that could be considered by the Committee on Territories has been overlooked.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston], a member of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the subcommittee that investigated and reported upon an act which is now embraced in the first six sections of the bill, I desire merely to say this authorizes the town of Valdez to issue bonds to the amount of $15,000 for the purpose of building dams and dikes to protect the city or town from the overflow that frequently results from the melting glaciers.

It is a town of 1,500 permanent population, with an additional floating population of 500, which on several occasions has been very seriously damaged and part of it washed away by the overflow that is caused by these glaciers melting and running down. They have a taxable property of $500,000, and the necessity for this legislation is that under the code of Alaska they are not authorized to issue bonds without the aid of legislation by Congress, and I am satisfied this legislation is very much needed and is very proper. As a rule, I do not approve the method of passing a number of measures in one bill, but being a member of this committee and having had opportunity to examine these measures, I can support the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has three minutes remaining.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the bill now pending is composed of ten or twelve separate bills, each of which has been very carefully considered by the Committee on the Territories; each of them was first submitted to a subcommittee, which investigated the several bills and reported back to the committee; each one of them had the unanimous support of every member of every subcommittee. These bills were then considered by the full committee and were unanimously reported to the House by the full committee. I feel very sure that every item of legislation in this proposed bill is a proper item of legislation and that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will permit, while the bill was being read I thought I heard some reference to the District of Columbia.

Mr. LLOYD. There is nothing in it about the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought I heard a reference to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to consume the balance of his time?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if there is no gentleman on our side of the House who desires to be heard, I think we are ready for a vote, after a suggestion which I desire to make, and that is simply to strike out sections 10, 20, and 34 in the bill, which provide the time when certain bills which are incorporated in the omnibus bill shall go into effect, as these sections would be inconsistent with the bill and the presence of these sections in the bill is the result of a mere clerical error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11 strike out section 10, on page 15 strike out section 20, and on page 19 strike out section 34.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I shall not object, because a proposition from a Republican source to strike out legislation formulated by a Republican committee is generally a good request.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And I ask also that the numbering of the sections be changed accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to and the numbering of the sections will be changed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 232, answered "present" 5, not voting 150, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6231. An act granting a pension to Lilla May Pavy; and
S. 6805. An act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

RESURVEY OF TOWNSHIPS IN WYOMING.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 6190, with certain House amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6190) authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made in the manner now provided by law for the survey and resurvey of public lands, and from time to time as may be necessary, a resurvey of the following townships in the State of Wyoming: Townships 41 to 44 north, ranges 81 to 92 west, inclusive; townships 45 to 48 north, ranges 81 to 104 west, inclusive, except township 48 north, ranges 88 to 91 west, inclusive; townships 49 to 52 north, ranges 89 to 92 west, inclusive; townships 53 to 56 north, ranges 101 to 103 west, inclusive; townships 12 and 13 north, range 86 west; townships 12, 13, and 14 north, range 87 west; townships 12 to 16 north, ranges 88 to 104 west, inclusive; townships 17 to 24 north, ranges 97 to 100 west, inclusive; townships 12 north, ranges 105 to 108 west, inclusive; townships 12 to 23 north, ranges 109 to 112 west, inclusive; township 24 north, range 111 west; township 24 north, range 114 west; townships 17 to 20 north, ranges 117 to 121 west, inclusive; township 57 north, range 68 west; townships 54 to 56 north, ranges 80 and 81 west, inclusive; all west of the sixth principal meridian.

SEC. 2. That nothing herein contained shall cause the applications of settlers upon other lands to be rejected, or cause to be increased the amount annually apportioned to the district of Wyoming out of the appropriation for surveys and resurveys of public lands. And all rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior requiring petitions from all settlers on said lands asking for a resurvey and an agreement to abide by the result of the survey, so far as these lands are concerned, are hereby abrogated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide rights or claims of any actual occupant of any of said lands so occupied to the amount of land to which, under the law, he is entitled: Provided further, That before any resurvey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of said lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to resurvey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be resurveyed: Provided further, That where it is found that, at the time the resurvey is entered upon, more than half the lands in any township have been disposed of by entry or otherwise, the resurvey in such township shall not be made; but this proviso shall not apply to lands within railroad land-grant limits.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to certify to the State of Kansas, for the benefit of the Kansas State Agricultural College, 7,682 acres of public land in said State, the same to be in full satisfaction of the claim of said State under an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862.

SEC. 4. That the tracts of land described as follows: Sections 9 and 10, lot 4, southwest quarter of northwest quarter, west half of southwest quarter, section 3, east half of southeast quarter, section 4, township 24 north, range 22 west; east half of northeast quarter, east half of southeast quarter, section 34, southwest quarter of northwest quarter, northwest quarter of southwest quarter, section 35, township 25 north, range 22 west, Indian meridian, together with the buildings and improvements thereon, which lands were formerly a part of the Fort Supply Military Reservation, in the former Territory and now State of Oklahoma, the use of which for the purpose of an insane asylum was granted to the Territory of Oklahoma by the act of Congress approved February 8, in the year 1890, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the use of the buildings on the Fort Supply Military Reservation by Oklahoma Territory for an insane asylum," be, and the same are hereby, granted to the State of Oklahoma for the purpose of an insane asylum for said State, and for other purposes.

SEC. 5. That the State of North Dakota is hereby authorized and empowered to sell such portion as it may deem wise of the southeast quarter of section 7 and the southwest quarter of section 8 and the northeast quarter of section 18 and the northwest quarter of section 17, all in township 131 north, range 65 west, heretofore granted to said State to be used for the purpose of a memorial park and burial ground of the soldiers killed at the battle of White Stone Hills, the money derived from the sale of said land to be used by the said State only for the purpose of erecting monuments and improving and beautifying such portions of such grounds as it may desire to use as a memorial park: Provided, That not less than 40 acres be reserved immediately surrounding the graves located on said land.

SEC. 6. That all qualified homesteaders who, under an order issued by the Land Department bearing date October 22, 1891, and taking effect November 2, 1891, made settlement upon and improved any portion of an odd-numbered section within the conflicting limits of the grants made in aid of the construction of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway and the Wisconsin Central Railroad, and were thereafter prevented from completing title to the land so settled upon and improved by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wisconsin Central Railroad Company against Forsythe (159 U. S., p. 46), shall, in making final proof upon homestead entries made for other lands, be given credit for the period of their bona fide residence upon and the amount of their improvements made on the lands for which they were unable to complete title. In the event that any entryman entitled to the benefits of this act shall have died, the right to make such second entry shall inure to his surviving widow, and if there be no widow living then to his minor child or children, if any, in the manner hereinbefore provided: Provided, That no such person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act who shall fail to make entry within two years after the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not be considered as entitling any person to make another homestead entry who shall have received the benefits of the homestead law since being prevented, as aforesaid, from completing title to the lands as aforesaid settled upon and improved by him.

That entrymen under the homestead laws of the United States within the territory above described who own and occupy the lands heretofore entered by them may, under the provisions of this act and subject to its conditions, enter other lands contiguous to their said homestead entry, which shall not, with the land so already entered, owned, and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 640 acres; and residence continued and improvements made upon the original homestead, subsequent to the making of the additional entry, shall be accepted as equivalent to actual residence and improvements made upon the additional land so entered, but final entry shall not be allowed of such additional land until five years after first entering the same, except in favor of entrymen entitled to credit for military service."

And all entries heretofore canceled on the ground that an entryman who commuted under the provisions of said act of June 15, 1880, is not entitled to the benefits of the act of June 5, 1900, shall be reinstated upon a showing by the entryman or his heirs, within one year from the approval of this act, that there were no valid grounds for the cancellation of such entries except that a former entry was perfected under the act of June 15, 1880, in all cases where valid adverse rights have not attached to the lands covered by such second entries since the date of their cancellation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A second is considered as ordered. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill containing in the form of amendments various House and Senate bills which have been reported unanimously from the Public Lands Committee. The Senate bill provides for the resurvey of certain lands in the State of Wyoming, or authorizes their resurvey when the Secretary of the Interior shall deem their resurvey necessary. This action is necessary, due to the fact that the Department has no authority to resurvey a tract, it having been once surveyed and the survey accepted. The third section of the bill contains a grant to the State of Kansas of something over 7,000 acres of land to satisfy its agricultural college land grant. This is necessary by reason of the fact that when Kansas made her last application under that grant the Secretary held that the lands she applied for were double minimum, and therefore allowed the State only half the land to which she was entitled. It is very clear that the holding of the Department was erroneous. The lands granted were, in fact, single minimum, and Kansas is entitled to this additional land.

The next section, Mr. Speaker, grants to the State of Oklahoma the old Fort Supply Military Reservation and the buildings situated on the reservation, for the purposes of an insane asylum. The State now holds this land and the buildings under a permission made to the Territory of Oklahoma. Section 5 of the bill authorizes the State of North Dakota to sell a portion of the section of land sold to it some time ago for a park in commemoration of the battle of White Stone Hills, but provides that the State shall not sell the portion of the land on which the graves are located. Section 6—

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is anybody on the committee opposed to the passage of this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is an unanimous report, is it not?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this legislation was unanimously agreed to on three different occasions by the committee. I do not know of any objection to it, and I do not care to take up the time of the House in an explanation of the different sections if it is not necessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is why I asked you the question.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman about the ninth section. According to that it would seem to me that any time within a year after the passage of the act any entryman who had never resided upon the land might show that for eight months prior to his making his proof he had been a resident upon the land, and an occupant of it, and so perfect his proof without having conformed to the law in that particular in any regard prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman does not clearly understand the provisions of the section. This section is an amended Senate bill. As it passed the Senate it was very much broader than the provisions contained in this bill. After consulting with the Interior Department with regard to the matter, the Department sent us a suggestion. I do not mean to say that the Department recommends the passage of this provision, but they sent us a suggestion of legislation along this line, if we were to legislate at all, which is now section 9.

And it is intended to relieve certain entrymen whose entries were canceled by a change in the rulings of the Interior Department. The Department held for a great many years that commutation proof could be made upon proof of eight months' residence at any time prior to the submission of proof. That ruling was overturned, and the Department held that the entryman must have resided on his land continuously for fourteen months immediately prior to the time of making proof. Naturally there were some entrymen who, depending upon the prior ruling of the Department, a ruling that had been established for forty years, suffered by reason of the new ruling. So, some entries, all of which had been approved by the local land offices, were canceled by the Department in Washington. Now, in order to relieve those cases, where the entryman clearly complied with the rulings of the Department, in force when their entries were made, we insert this section in the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the principle of this section has not the approval of the Department. They simply say, if you are going to legislate in this direction that that is the extent to which they want to go, but they do not approve it.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me that is not entirely the attitude of the Department.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman any letters from the Department?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will find in the report on the bill a letter from the Department on the subject.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman refer me to the page?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No one can get any advantage under this section unless the local land office has found his proof sufficient. No one who has not heretofore obtained a final certificate can obtain any advantage. This is only to legalize certain entries.

Mr. MONDELL. Answering the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I take it for granted that the Department would not say to Congress that Congress should by legislation overturn its decision. The Department itself, if the gentleman will give me his attention, did modify its own decision with regard to these matters by deciding some time after its change of ruling that the later decision should not apply to any entries made prior to the 1st of last November.

So that, as a matter of fact, this is simply curing some entries upon which the Department had acted adversely, which entries were made and proof submitted in the local land office before the change of rulings. At the time these entries were made and proof submitted the entrymen could not know that the Department contemplated overturning its rulings and practice of forty years.

Mr. PAYNE. I find a clause here that seems to state the opinion of the committee. It is as follows:

The bill was favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Public Lands and was passed by the Senate. It was referred by your committee to the Secretary of the Interior, who submitted an unfavorable report on the bill as originally drafted, and recommended, if the enactment of a measure of this kind was deemed desirable, the substitution therefor of the draft of a bill which, with two minor changes, is that of the above proposed amendment.

I do not find the letter of the Secretary.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no question as to the propriety and justice of this legislation, and I am satisfied that the officers of the Department did not intend in that letter to convey the thought that the legislation was not advisable. It is necessary in order to reinstate some entries that were adversely acted upon by the Department under its change of view with regard to commutation proof, but which were initiated and in most cases proof offered long before the change of rule and decision.

Mr. REEDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. REEDER. You say this bill is made up of a number of bills. I want to ask if each of these bills was considered by the committee, and if each one received unanimous support of the committee?

Mr. MONDELL. Every section of this bill, with two exceptions, is a separate bill, either a House or a Senate bill, which was passed upon in full committee and reported unanimously. Then later, I will say to the gentleman, an omnibus bill was introduced, carrying these bills, and the committee on two occasions, with a full attendance, went over that omnibus bill and finally eliminated from it two sections that the committee believed to be proper legislation, but which we feared there might be some objection to in the House, and then unanimously reported the bill now before the House.

Mr. REEDER. Does this bill as it is before us contain those two sections?

Mr. MONDELL. It does not contain them or a number of other bills that were before our committee. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that our endeavor was to put nothing in this bill that could not have come before the House, and would not have come before the House, by unanimous consent.

Mr. REEDER. Then, do I understand that each of these different items was taken up separately by the committee and unanimously agreed to?

Mr. MONDELL. They were.

Mr. REEDER. I wish to ask the gentleman further with reference to section 12. Is it to validate the military scrip or military bounty and college scrip? The question has arisen as to whether it is to validate that scrip; and I wish also to ask the meaning of the words "patents heretofore issued."

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Speaker, down to the last year the Department held that military bounties, land warrants, surveyor-generals' certificates, and agricultural college scrip might be located on any offered land—any land that had ever been offered land—land offered for sale but not sold. Now, in 1889 the distinction between offered and nonoffered lands was removed, except as to the State of Missouri, so that, as a matter of fact, there has been since 1889 no offered land except in the State of Missouri; but the Department still held that as to any lands that have ever been opened these warrants could be located on them. But after the Department held that these warrants and various forms of scrip could only be located on lands that are now offered lands. When the Department discovered the effect of that decision they reversed themselves to this effect: They said that the Department was justified in confirming and passing to patent all of the scrip lands which had been located under this scrip prior to the time of their adverse decision. Now, all this does—and the Department says they think it is unnecessary—is to confirm these patents which the Department has issued and which the Department holds are sufficient.

Mr. REEDER. The question is not, then, as to the validity of the scrip?

Mr. MONDELL. We validate nothing that the Department has not validated. We simply put the seal of legislative approval on what the Department has done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless some one wishes to ask a question in regard to some particular section of the bill, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am on this committee, and I want to know whether the gentleman from Texas, who has demanded a second, is opposed to the bill. If not, as I understand it, a member of the committee is entitled to control the time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has control of the time. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am on the committee, and favor the bill, and under these circumstances he has the right to control the time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Of course I will be glad if I have the time, to yield some of it to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not want any time. I thought that I would be entitled to the control of the time, and think so yet; but I yield to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill seems to be a Senate bill, including a number of land propositions. Its caption indicates that it is an act "authorizing the resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming," yet, on briefly perusing its contents, I find that it covers matters pertaining to States all the way from North Dakota to the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and other States of the Union.

All these measures may be meritorious. There would be no objection to any of them, perhaps, if I had time to separately consider them; but the bill has been called up and suspension of the rules moved, and we are expected to discuss and consider this very important and comprehensive matter in twenty minutes on each side.

Section 21 seems to confirm a railroad grant in the State of Minnesota, although this is supposed to be a bill to resurvey certain townships in the State of Wyoming. Section 22 seems to refer to certain lands in the State of Kansas. Section 23 seems to refer to land in the State of Minnesota. Section 24 has something to do with lands in the State of North Dakota. Section 25 appears to refer to lands down in Noxubee County, Miss. Lands appear to be granted to these communities, and a lot of titles are confirmed, and none of us not on that committee know where they are located or what their merits are. All may be meritorious, and if there were time to consider them I perhaps would vote for each and every one of them; but under the circumstances, not knowing what I am voting for, whether I am confirming a good land transaction or a bad one, I am not willing to affirmatively record my vote.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this morning I endeavored to make a few remarks—

Mr. MONDELL. Is not the gentleman willing to defer somewhat to the judgment of the members of the minority, all of whom have gone over these matters very carefully?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, yes; I think they are very honorable gentlemen and would not vote to report a measure that was not meritorious; but under the circumstances, not having more time to investigate this bill—and perhaps a number of good things that ought to be in it are excluded—I shall content myself with voting in the negative.

This morning I endeavored to make a few observations in regard to the passage of an anti-injunction bill at this session of Congress, and I would like to conclude those remarks at this time.

I had a statement read from the Washington Post, which indicated that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] was circulating a request for a Republican caucus to meet at an early date. I am glad to hear that the Republican party has at last concluded—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HENRY of Texas (continuing). To take up the subject of injunctions, although they know there is no prospect of putting it upon the statute books—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas (continuing). Because they can not get action at the other end of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURRIER). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is not speaking to the bill. The bill is one in regard to public lands, and the gentleman has gone off onto anti-injunction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman from New York would permit me, I intended a little later on to come to his anti-injunction bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How does the gentleman know that there is nothing in this omnibus bill about the anti-injunction bill introduced by me? He has not had time to read it.

Mr. PAYNE. I heard it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There was so much noise and confusion that I could not possibly understand myself whether there was any reference in it to bill 69, which I introduced on the subject of injunctions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard the bill read, and the Chair is aware that there is nothing in it on the subject of injunctions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The Chair assures me that there is nothing in the bill upon anti-injunction?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is glad to assure the gentleman from Texas of that fact, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor to do so. Having high regard for the gentleman who occupies the chair, of course I shall respect his statement and conclude that there is nothing in this omnibus bill which refers to other matters that are of deepest importance that I would like to mention at this time.

Mr. Speaker, we have gone along here for more than sixty days, and whenever a second has been demanded by any gentleman, even if he opposed the bill, he has been allowed to discuss any matter that he chose to discuss, whether it touched the bill or not; but here, when I propose to take up this omnibus land matter and discuss a bill that is of more importance than all these transactions put together—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order; the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss this bill, if I could get an opportunity.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I shall endeavor to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas knows the rules of the House and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I shall endeavor to proceed in order, but I was under the impression that the rules of the House had been suspended and that I could get along—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I shall endeavor, then, to confine myself to the bill. I did not understand the last remark by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I said I would like to discuss the bill for a few minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Which bill? The land bill or the anti-injunction bill, introduced both by him and myself?

Mr. PAYNE. The bill before the House; the gentleman ought to understand that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do understand it, but I want the gentleman to be definite and specific in order that I can exactly locate his position. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish there were time to read and consider everything that is contained in this omnibus measure, because if we had more time I might come to the conclusion that there were other meritorious land matters, to say nothing of other most important questions now in my mind and in the minds of other gentlemen across the aisle from me, that ought to be brought in as a provision in some omnibus bill. But the rules forbid a consideration even of the measure, and since they do, and since the Chair is now adhering rigidly to a rule which up to yesterday and to-day has been disregarded on all occasions—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there are some gentlemen on this side of the House who tell me that they have items in the bill and understand something about this omnibus land matter, and that being the case, I would like to know a little something about it before I vote in favor of it. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to devote ten minutes more to an intelligent discussion of this bill, as I have already been doing for ten minutes, but there are gentlemen who have items in it, and as I have agreed to yield a part of my time, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLEE].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House for the five minutes yielded me, probably, in what I have to say in reference to the bill, because this is such a meritorious bill I feel sure it will pass. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who has just taken his seat, referred to section 25 of the bill and has referred to certain lands in the State of Mississippi and in the county of Noxubee. This land is located in my district, and a constituent of mine is interested in it. I desire to state to the House upon both sides of the Chamber that section 25 in this bill, after I fully explained my bill for Brewer, had the unanimous approval and support of every member of the Committee on Public Lands. I am informed that every other section of the bill has also the unanimous approval of every member of the committee, and had it upon three separate occasions when there was a full attendance of the committee to consider the bill. I am sure that if all the provisions of the bill are as meritorious as section 25, it deserves the approval of every Member upon this floor, and I trust that each and every one will accord to it his support by casting his vote in favor of the passage of the bill. Section 25 refers to 160 acres of land in Noxubee County, Miss., which is owned by Raleigh Brewer, sr. This land was purchased by his predecessors in the chain of title from an Indian in 1831. At that time a purchase from an Indian required that the transfer of the title should be consented to by the President of the United States. Such a thing at this day and time would be unheard of, as he could not possibly take up and consider every minor detail in the transfer of every title. This went by in the lax and loose way in which matters were transacted, possibly, in the early history of the country, and the President failed to approve this title. Some time ago in looking into it when Mr. Brewer wanted to sell a few acres, the man who was investigating the title discovered that a grant had never been made by the United States.

I secured affidavits, which appear in the report, showing he had been in actual possession of it since 1848, and that there had never been an adverse claimant to it, and that he was occupying it to-day, and there was still no adverse claimant. My bill provided to quiet the title and grant a patent to Mr. Brewer. The Public Lands Committee unanimously reported the bill to the House. It is impossible, however, in view of the peculiar circumstances which surround us, to secure consideration of the individual bill, and hence it was included by my request in this omnibus bill, together with the others, and, as I said a moment ago, this one, as well as all the others, has had the unanimous approval of every member of the committee. Knowing that this is a meritorious measure and is entitled to the approval of every Member of the House, and believing that possibly the others are the same, as I am assured by both Democratic and Republican members of the Committee that they are, I hope that it will receive the unanimous vote of every Member upon the floor. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to say in the limited time allotted me to discuss this omnibus bill that every provision contained in it was very carefully considered by the Committee on the Public Lands of the House. Every one of those bills was unanimously reported and all are now on the Calendar. Of course, in answer to something that has been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], there are many bills pending before that committee, as there are before every other committee in this House, that are meritorious and upon which I should like to see action taken, but we believe that every provision of this omnibus bill is meritorious and little question can be raised concerning any provision in the bill.

I desire to state to my friend from Texas, with reference to section 21 of the bill, that it does not approve a land grant to a railroad, but as I understand that bill there had been in process of litigation for a great many years a small tract of land up there in the State of Minnesota, and Cathcart had exhausted his resources in litigating with the railroad. A compromise was affected, and this bill authorizes the railroad to convey to Cathcart, and so far as this tract is concerned it will give Cathcart a good title and end the litigation. Is that not correct, I will ask my friend from Minnesota?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; it will authorize the railroad company to convey to him land upon which he has lived for nineteen years and upon which his home is located.

Mr. ROBINSON. And upon which he has made important improvements.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And has been fighting the railroad all of this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that instead of being a vicious measure, it is a most meritorious one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to me? I yielded a minute to the gentleman. After the lucid explanation of the section by the gentleman from Arkansas, believing in his intelligence and ability, of course I am in favor of section 21, now understanding it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to say also that this remark covers the item of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. I favor his proposition in this omnibus bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if there were time and opportunity for discussion of each and every section of the bill, I am satisfied that not only the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], but every Member of the House would be as well satisfied with regard to all of the provisions of the bill as he is in regard to sections 21 and 25. There are no grants to railroads in this bill or anything that flavors of that sort of legislation. We do authorize a certain railroad company that has now only an easement on a certain 80 acres of land to grant a title in fee to the farmer living upon the land, and for that purpose we grant a title in fee to the railroad company. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is there any time left to those opposed to the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is an omnibus bill, it is true, but every section of it which constitutes the bill has been carefully considered by the committee. We have guarded the rights as near as we could of both the living and the dead. For instance, there is a graveyard out in some public land where some heroes of the Whitestone Mountain battle lie, and instead of giving all the public lands out there, or arranging to give it all to the local authorities, for the purpose of enlarging and beautifying the park around those graves, we go so far as to provide this, "That not less than 40 acres be reserved immediately surrounding the graves located on said land." As near as a committee of eighteen intelligent white men could possibly, endeavoring to do justice in this matter, after weeks and weeks of labor, we have come to the conclusion to report this bill unanimously, and I shall unanimously vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding I know that the gentleman from New York will not discuss matters of deep concern to me on this occasion, I yield him four minutes of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I return again to the ninth section, about which I asked the gentleman from Wyoming as to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. I find in a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, dated February 18 last, the last two clauses are as follows:

The Department has generally in rejecting commutation proofs solely upon the ground of insufficient residence refrained from canceling the entries, to the end that the claimant might at a later date submit new and satisfactory proofs, and is now inclined to the belief that the extension of any greater relief is unnecessary.

I reiterate without hesitation the adverse recommendation against this bill, which was contained in my report to the Senate committee, but if some further relief in this direction seems necessary I ask your attention to inclosed draft of a bill, which will afford the desired relief in all cases where no adverse rights have intervened.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands—

Mr. PAYNE. I think I understand—which is substantially section 9 of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I thought that was what the gentleman was going to say, and I thought I would say it myself—that is substantially section 9 of this bill. It does meet the question of adverse rights of parties who have intervened since the entry was made, but the Secretary is still of the opinion that the rule of the Department should be maintained, as plainly appears from his letter, and the fourteen months' actual residence should be required instead of eight months, as provided in section 9—

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted to get that question before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that since that decision was made the Department itself has overruled its former action by providing that the decision relating to fourteen months' continuous residence before proof shall not apply to any entry made prior to the 1st of last November, so that our bill simply follows the same—

Mr. PAYNE. Your bill extends it forever, so that entries made hereafter will—

Mr. STEENERSON. This section only confirms the amount of proof which was accepted by the register and receiver of the land office in compliance with the law at the time.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I understand the gentleman from Wyoming that the Secretary has anticipated this section becoming a law and has made it the law for himself in the Department, although he plainly in his correspondence was against it when he submitted this section to the committee. Is that true?

Mr. MONDELL. In other words the Secretary, seeing the hardship wrought by his decision, while he did not go back and cure cases that had been adversely reported, he provided that any further entryman should be relieved of the burden of the requirement up to a certain date.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, with the assurance that the Secretary of the Interior has changed his mind upon the subject and is now in accord with this ninth section, I shall not vote against the bill. Although when I heard the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] originally and read from this letter, I thought it was something that ought not to be passed without the matter being presented to the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to consume the time I have left; but I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 197, nays 21, answered "present" 16, not voting 153, as follows:

TOKYO EXPOSITION.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4639) and move that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman [Mr. RODENBERG] at this time for anything more than unanimous consent for the passage of the bill. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4639) to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That the bill may be, upon reading, considered as passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill and yield to me two or three minutes, and I think it will facilitate public business.

Mr. RODENBERG. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. To be entirely frank with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Chair has down for recognition next the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] upon an omnibus pension bill, or certain amendments to one, and the Chair can not recognize the gentleman if the consideration of the bill would involve discussion, except very briefly, or would involve a roll call.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi, as I understand it, asks only two or three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will indulge me for a moment, and a little bit out of order, I wish to say that a distinguished Englishman once said that "at the water line domestic dissensions ceased." I regard the bill just offered by the gentleman from Illinois as a matter of international comity and international courtesy—in a way, a question of gentlemanly conduct between nations. I do not, therefore, regard it as necessary or advisable to apply the programme that I have announced to a bill of this character. If the request is made for unanimous consent for its consideration, I shall not make objection and I shall not demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the invitation extended by the Imperial Japanese Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the Great National Exposition to be held in Tokyo, Japan, from April 1 to October 31, 1912. In accepting said invitation it is hereby declared to be the purpose of the Government of the United States to participate in said Japanese National Exposition by erecting suitable buildings and making an appropriate exhibit of arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil and mines and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government of the United States and an exhibit of such other articles as the President of the United States may direct: Provided, That such participation, buildings, exhibits, and all expenses connected therewith, including salaries, clerical and other services, and transportation of persons and exhibits shall not exceed $1,500,000.

"Sec. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three commissioners-general who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of State, take such steps as are necessary to ascertain the general plan and scope of the said National Exposition, the character, size, and cost of the buildings to be erected by the United States, and the extent and character of the exhibit authorized hereunder that would best serve the interests of the United States and its citizens, and would be best adapted to illustrate the growth and development of the country and the character of our people. That thereafter, and as soon as practicable, said commissioners shall report fully to the President and to Congress the result of such investigation, together with their recommendations and the estimated cost of said participation in said exposition within the foregoing authorization; and it shall also be the duty of the commissioners-general to report to the President for transmission to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a detailed statement of all expenditures incurred hereunder. That one of said commissioners-general shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of $8,000 per annum; that the other two commissioners-general shall receive as compensation for their services from and after January 1, 1909, $2,000 per annum for the first year and $5,000 per annum thereafter; together with the actual traveling expenses of all of said commissioners-general, including sleeping-car service and a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $5 when actually traveling in the discharge of their duties as said commissioners-general. That the President shall also appoint a secretary, at a compensation of $5,000 per annum, together with his actual traveling expenses, including sleeping-car service and a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $5 when actually traveling in the discharge of his duties as such secretary, who shall act as disbursing agent and who shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him from time to time by the commissioners-general, and who shall render his accounts at least quarterly to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States, and shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may require. And the said commissioners-general, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, shall appoint from time to time such clerical and other assistants as may be necessary and as may hereafter be appropriated for in connection with the preparation of the plan and other necessary services as may be required in connection with the participation herein authorized.

"Sec. 3. That upon the request of the Secretary of State the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to furnish free transportation on Government transports from San Francisco to Japan and return of all Government exhibits and for such officials or employees connected with the commission or in charge of any or all Government exhibits.

"Sec. 4. That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the salaries and all other expenses herein authorized and incurred in ascertaining the general plan of said National Exposition and the preparation and report to Congress of the plan and extent of our proposed participation therein and the estimate of the amount necessary to meet the expense thereof during the fiscal year 1910, to be immediately available."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1062. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 6805. An act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE PENSIONS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 17874 from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of which the Clerk will read the title, and that the Senate amendments to the House amendment be concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers of said war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman has asked unanimous consent.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is to concur in some Senate amendments in which a large number of Members of the House on both sides and a number of Senators are interested.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; but under the rule I have laid down for myself, I am compelled to object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 17874, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill the title of which the Clerk has read, and concur in the Senate amendments to the House amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second, for the purpose of having the gentleman from New Jersey explain the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up any of the time of the House in explaining this bill. I can only say that it is simply one of those omnibus private pension bills to which a few amendments have been made by the Senate, and the committee has unanimously agreed that the Senate amendments be concurred in. That is all there is in the motion. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, from a private explanation made to me by the gentleman from New Jersey concerning the character of the Senate amendments and the agreement by the House committee, I think this bill ought to pass, and therefore shall not consume any further time in the discussion of it, but shall call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to have time from somebody to ask some information about this bill from one side or the other.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered. By unanimous consent that can be done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to make an inquiry about one of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My information is, and I will ask the gentleman if I am correct, that the Senate struck out the pension of Walter A. Chapman, who was one of the Spanish war soldiers?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is not in this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right; I am glad to hear it.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 217, nays 1, answered "present" 22, not voting 147, as follows:

JERRY MURPHY.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1991, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following House bill and further insist on the House amendment and agree to a conference.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

The bill H. R. 1991, granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

CONTROL AND OWNERSHIP OF LAND IN THE CANAL ZONE, PANAMA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 18694) relating to the use, control, and ownership of lands in the Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to grant leases of the public lands in the Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama, for such period, not exceeding twenty-five years, and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable. No lease, however, shall be granted for a tract of land in excess of 50 hectares, nor to any person who shall not have first established, by affidavit and by such other proof as may be required, that such person is the head of a family or over the age of 21 years, and that the application for a lease is made in good faith for the purposes of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the benefit of any other person whatsoever, and that such person will faithfully comply with all the requirements of law as to settlement, residence, and cultivation. In granting such leases preference shall be accorded to actual occupants of lands in good faith.

Sec. 2. That no portion of the lands of the United States within the Canal Zone shall be leased hereunder unless it shall first be made to appear, by a statement or plat filed by the Isthmian Canal Commission with the collector of revenues for the Canal Zone, that it is not contemplated to use such lands in the work of canal construction or to set the same aside as a town site; and all leases shall be made subject to the provision that if at any time it shall become necessary, notwithstanding, for the United States to occupy or use any portion of the leased lands, it shall have the right to do so without further compensation to the lessee than for the reasonable value of the necessary improvements made upon said tracts by the lessee, the same to be determined by the courts of the Canal Zone.

Sec. 3. That all leases of lands hereunder shall reserve to the United States all mineral, oil, and gas rights in the lands leased.

Sec. 4. That for the purpose of adjusting claims for lands occupied or necessary to be occupied by the canal and the Panama Railroad and appurtenant works the President is authorized to convey the title of the United States to such portions of the public lands in the Canal Zone as by him may be deemed advisable.

Sec. 5. That the President may, in his discretion, require a land survey to be made of the Canal Zone.

Sec. 6. That the powers conferred upon the President under this act may be exercised by him through the Isthmian Canal Commission or in such other manner as he may designate.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Its passage was requested by the War Department, and its purpose is so fully set out in it that I shall not at present consume further time, but reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to delay the passage of the bill nor indulge in any long discussion about it. There are various features of the bill which are deemed necessary for several purposes, not only to settle disputes and claims where it is necessary to use land to construct the canal, relocate the railroad, or locate towns, but it is also necessary to encourage agriculture along the Canal Zone for the purpose of producing vegetables and fruit and things of that sort that are necessary for our people operating there. We can not rely on shipping enough there for 40,000 people, nor could they be kept fresh and fit for use.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. To what extent does the bill give to the President of the United States the right to dispose of land belonging to the United States in the Canal Zone?

Mr. ADAMSON. Not at all. That provision in the bill relates to the settlement of disputes entirely where it is necessary to proceed with canal construction, and as occupants claim the land and compensation, if we appropriate it. We propose to side step for the present the question of title, and merely give them other land in lieu of what we use.

Mr. FINLEY. And in no other way has he any right or discretion to dispose of land belonging to the United States in the Canal Zone?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; that is not contemplated at all.

Mr. FINLEY. There is a provision giving the President the right to dispose of land in the case the gentleman has stated?

Mr. ADAMSON. To settle disputes where it is necessary to use land, to encourage market gardening and dairying, we propose to lease land for twenty-five years. Short leases are not so desirable and do not answer the purpose. We do not want to put the lands on the market; we would rather lease them, providing, as we do in the bill, for the termination of the leases on equitable terms if we need the land at any time for canal or town-site location.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be against public policy to sell the lands at all?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course that is not contemplated. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is well understood and known that the President of the United States is absolutely in control of the Panama Zone. He controls it by rules, by regulations, and resolutions that he may adopt and enforce himself on all subjects—political, religious, military, economic, and otherwise. I do not see any special reason or demand at this time for this bill, and I particularly do not see any reason why the lease provided for should be extended for twenty-five years. If we finish the canal, as we say we are going to do and as I hope we will, within eight years, why authorize the President to make a limit of twenty-five years, when, as I understand, it is governed to-day in the Zone in matters of like character by a limit of five years.

And, in addition to that, the objection I have to this bill is that it utterly and entirely ignores all the rights and titles that parties who are called "squatters" have acquired in the Zone by right of occupancy. Surely the country when Panama was a part of the Colombian Republic or under the Spanish rule had some rules and regulations touching the titles to these lands. We encountered similar troubles about the titles of occupants in the Louisiana purchase. Yet we are told by Mr. Rogers in the hearing had before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that there was a court established for the regulation and settlement of the title to these lands. Mr. Rogers, who is the attorney for the Panama Commission, stated in the hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee:

I was coming to that. The lands, so far as we have been able to discover, have simply been occupied by men who have "squatted" upon them. There has been for the last half century—I believe even further back than that—transfers of these colorable titles between individuals. There were some such transfers made down near Fort Chagres or near the Bay of Limon which dated back to 1820.

Of course we are not prone to pause and give much heed either to the demands or the rights of those individuals found within the limits of the Zone after our Government took charge of the land embraced in the Zone.

I call the attention of the committee to the following statement made by Mr. Rogers, the attorney for the Panama Commission:

Mr. ROGERS. As the law stands to-day upon the Isthmus, we can proceed in our own court, the circuit court, and the supreme court of the Canal Zone for the purpose of adjudicating questions of title that have arisen there. When it comes to a question of making pecuniary compensation for land taken, the title in that instance being settled and conceded to be in the claimant, the courts have held that we can only determine that particular question according to the provisions of the treaty; that is to say, the courts can try the question of title, but the question of damages of pecuniary loss must be settled by the joint commission under the terms of the treaty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the court as it exists to-day?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What act of Congress gives the President the right to confer upon the Supreme Court further additional jurisdiction on any subject?

Mr. ROGERS. That question is involved of course in the general authority of the President to make rules and regulations for the government of the Canal Zone.

We all know as lawyers, under the enlightened laws of the world and of all the States of our Union, a man can acquire a good title to property by occupying it for twenty years in some States, and more or less in others, as if he had a deed for it. I say that this great principle, Mr. Speaker, is ignored in this bill, and for this reason chiefly I do not think this bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Did these squatters or these holders under these various transfers acquiesce in that, in being dispossessed by the Government?

Mr. ROGERS. They were not dispossessed by the Government. It was simply a legislative statement that no grant should be made to any public land within this section of the country that lay on either side of the railroad for some distance.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that if we have a court established at Panama, as Mr. Rogers, the attorney, says the President has established there, under the rules and regulations that he is allowed to prescribe, why not let that court, already equipped and clothed with proper authority, investigate these titles and do what is right and fair? The questions to and the answers of Mr. Rogers disclose the true meaning in this bill. Listen:

Mr. RICHARDSON. Was there any rule regarding length of occupancy that would give a man title?

Mr. ROGERS. That is one of the disputed legal questions. The best advice I have been able to get, and my own conviction is, that no occupancy, however long, will create a title which is valid against the Government of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the question here is, What title, if any, did these people have, by occupancy or otherwise, at the time that the United States, by treaty with Panama, acquired possession?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman, as a Democrat, surely does not want to assume the position that that so-called "Canal Zone code" promulgated by the President was done so with any authority of law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want, as a Democrat, to commit myself to anything of the kind, but the mere statement I made was that if we put this matter in the hands of the President of the United States, why not let the court that he has established take care of it? This bill proposes by a statute to deprive these squatters of their rights before our possession.

I believe, if I recollect right, my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON] inquired by what authority the President exercised authority in the Zone. This bill ignores the title of these people who were occupying the land for years and years back, makes no regulation for their protection, but places the whole matter of settling title in the hands of the President. Why, in our country a man sitting down on a tract of land with some color of title, if he is there for twenty years, gets a title as good as a deed could give him.

Mr. HARRISON. If the purpose of this bill is to assure the land titles in the Panama Canal Zone, does not the gentleman think a better way to accomplish that would be to establish a regular form of government, rather than the shameful and absurd travesty of government that is going on there now?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that this bill, according to the opportunity that I had to read it before the committee, and in the light of the hearings, undertakes to do anything in the world, as its supporters contend, except to settle the question of growing vegetables and grazing cattle and incidentally evicting possessory tenants. Why can not it be settled by the court existing now? This bill adds to the troubles instead of relieving them.

Mr. HARRISON. Would it not be better to settle titles to land by establishing a regular form of government in the first place?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly it would. I am not going to enter into that discussion. I am simply saying that heretofore and up to date the President has been controlling this whole matter, and this bill, without any explained reason, asks for a lease of the limit of twenty-five years and gives no heed to acquired titles. What reason is there for extending this lease matter to twenty-five years? Has anybody given any reason for running it for twenty-five years? I have heard none satisfactory. We expect to get the canal built before that, and why make this bill extend the lease for twenty-five years? Will the gentleman from New York tell me that?

Mr. HARRISON. I did not draw up this bill, and I know nothing about that particular point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know the gentleman did not, but he seems to favor it.

Mr. HARRISON. On the contrary, I am opposed to the bill. I think the best thing the committee could do would be to establish a regular form of government for the Canal Zone.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is not the question here. I think that a bill which purports to carry as much of importance in it as this ought not to be hurriedly and hastily considered. I do not believe that anybody will be hurt at all by postponing this, letting it go over until Congress meets in December. There are a great many other objections that I could point out to the bill that occur to me, but I do not wish to consume the time so kindly given me by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. We are all interested in the government of the Panama Canal; we are aware how complex titles to land are under Spanish law; yet it is certain, as stated in the hearings before the committee, that a title to land under Spanish law is by occupation. I realize that we require a regular established government in Panama, with courts established by law and executive officers provided for. But we have no such machinery in control. The President controls the whole thing; ordains the courts and provides for the process thereof; regulates appeals, and now this bill proposes for the President really to settle titles and move a man whether he wants to go or not by offering him another piece of land.

This bill ignores a controlling fact that the title to the land held by a "squatter" is governed by the character of title conferred by the government under whose dominion he resided. It behooves our Government in the matters of individual rights and claims to uphold such rights, acquired by mere occupancy or otherwise, as the individual acquired under a different sovereignty. These are a few of the questions arising in this bill that cause me to object to its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to consume the time yielded to me by the gentleman from Georgia. I have read this bill only this moment. Under the rule that we are operating under, there are perhaps not twenty-five Members of the House who understand what the bill is. I am one of the twenty-five, and I have learned my lesson in the last ten minutes by having time reserved in order that I might, at least, read the bill. As I read it there is not a more marked illustration of the subserviency of the legislative branch of the United States Government to the executive branch than is shown in this bill. Here is a bill that absolutely delegates to the President of the United States—the Chief Executive of the United States—the right to determine titles to lands. Think of that just a minute, if you have not passed the point of where you can think at all. It is a deprivation of the right of the judiciary to pass upon titles to land. The very first clause reads that the President is hereby "authorized to grant leases of the public lands in the Canal Zone." Why and where and when was the President of the United States converted into a land lessor under the Constitution, the laws, the customs, or the regulations even of the United States Government?

To lease lands on "terms not exceeding twenty-five years." Now, you would think that this was a fresh proposition that he was to lease lands or sell lands or convey lands to the Panama Canal Company for the purpose of constructing the canal, but the bill expressly says he shall not do that; that when that question arises this bill is not to apply. Then the bill goes on to say, "No lease, however, shall be granted." Granted by whom? By the President, so busy that he has not over seven or eight hours to sleep and two or three hours to think in during the day. The balance of the time he is receiving deputations, hearing the disputations in the Republican party, and trying to determine whether or not he is upon one side or the other, but he is, under this bill, bound to see to it that "no lease, however, shall be granted for a tract of land in excess of 50 hectares." Why, he has to consult a dictionary to find out what 50 hectares are, to start with, and he has to see that they are "not conveyed to any person who shall not have first established, by affidavit and by such other proof as may be required, that such person is the head of a family."

You are conveying the entire homestead rights, in so far as the United States Government has any homestead rights in Panama to grant, to the President of the United States—not to the Department of the Interior, not to the Land Office, but to the President of the United States—and by doing that you are substantially conveying it to the private secretary of the President of the United States, because, as a rule, he has not the time to look into these things and must allow them to be regulated by the secretary to the President. In section 2 the bill provides "that no portion of the lands of the United States within the Canal Zone shall be leased hereunder unless it shall first be made to appear by a statement or plat filed by the Isthmian Canal Commission with the collector of revenues for the Canal Zone"—just think of it for a minute! The Isthmian Canal Commission has to file with "the collector of revenues" for the Canal Zone a statement that it is "not contemplating to use such lands in the work of the canal construction." Here is a fellow who is sent down there to act as revenue collector, and he is to pass upon this important proposition. Who is he? None of you know. I notice the report says: "The bill as amended has the approval of the War Department."

I do not doubt it, and I do not doubt but that it has the approval of the United States Panaman proconsul, whoever in the mischief he happens to be at this present moment. They change them so rapidly that I do not know. And here is a provision—

That all leases of lands hereunder shall reserve to the United States all mineral, oil, and gas rights in the lands leased.

The President of the United States, the busiest man in the United States if he is attending to his work—and I believe nobody has ever charged him with not attending to it, wrongfully or rightfully—has to determine whether or not lands are mineral, or oil, or gas lands. And then there follows this next provision:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of adjusting claims for lands occupied or necessary to be occupied by the canal and the Panama Railroad—

The railroad is in it—

And appurtenant works—

Whatever the term "appurtenant" may mean—it would take fourteen Philadelphia lawyers to determine—

The President is authorized to convey the title of the United States to such portions of the public lands in the Canal Zone as by him may be deemed advisable.

There is just one provision in the bill that is right enough and ought to be passed, and that is section 5:

That the President may, in his discretion, require a land survey to be made of the Canal Zone.

I presume, if he required it, he would require it to be made by the Land Office, and there would be at least that much regularity in the proceedings. Why, when Verres returned to Rome to be indicted by Cicero he could not have plead before the Roman Senate that he had ever received as full power to work right or wrong, wisdom or folly, righteousness or iniquity, as this bill, to be passed by you in your self-humiliated status as national legislators, confers nominally upon the President, but really upon some unknown, obscure, and irresponsible subordinate of the President, to be selected by him. Why do I say that? Because the President can not possibly attend to this work, and you know it as well as I. This bill ought to be voted down. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill was reported to the House April 6 and has been on the Union Calendar ever since that date. Its provisions should therefore be known.

It seems to me that after having authorized the President of the United States to construct the Panama Canal it is a little late in the day to demur about conferring authority upon him, through the same agencies as are building the canal or such other agencies of the Government as he may designate, to manage the lands in the Canal Zone. We have been there for a considerable period.

There are in the Zone, belonging to the United States, according to the statement of Mr. Rogers, general counsel of the Panama Commission, 448.37 square miles of land within the Zone, and of that the United States acquired, by transfer from the old French Panama Canal Company, 52.11 square miles; acquired by purchase or condemnation, 3 square miles. The Panama Railroad Company owns 68.12 square miles, and there are public lands belonging to the United States of 188.91 square miles, making a total of 312.14 out of 448.46 square miles. So there are 136.32 square miles either owned or claimed by private individuals.

Now, those lands are generally jungle and forest, and although of extraordinary fertility, they have, except in the most minute degree, not been cultivated, and it is believed that they are capable of cultivation, and that with authority lodged in the Isthmian Canal Commission or other appropriate agency to grant leases for a period not exceeding twenty-five years, there will be cultivation like that of gardens to produce vegetables that are badly needed, as well as of farms, so that live stock will be grown there in order that there may be a supply of fresh meat. There are a few instances of very successful cultivation, but the short-term leases which alone the War Department has authority to grant have discouraged the building of any improvements.

There can certainly be no objection to leasing those wild lands, which are not wanted for any purpose of canal construction or any work incident thereto. And, besides that, for all the lands that are either owned or claimed by private persons that are needed for the building of the canal and the works appurtenant thereto exorbitant prices are invariably claimed, and up to date it has been almost impracticable to agree upon the compensation to be made, whereas those persons are very ready to accept other tracts of land from the United States which it does not need in exchange for the lands which they own. There is no purpose in this bill to interfere in the least degree, and no authority conferred in the bill to interfere, in questions of title that are outside the Canal Zone limit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WANGER. I certainly yield to the gentleman for a question, and will say that I am rather surprised that he stands here in opposition to the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have you tell the House what recognition this bill gives to any party who had occupied land and claimed the title before the United States Government ever got possession of the Panama Zone.

Mr. WANGER. None at all. There is no word or line in the bill that recognizes the title of anybody.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is what I say. Do you not admit that the inhabitants of that Zone, when they were under the Government of Colombia or any other government, acquired some kind of title to those lands that this bill does not recognize?

Mr. WANGER. We do not meddle with that question. We know that there are 136.32 square miles of land there that other persons may own. When the Canal Commission desires to acquire land to which the United States has no title, and some person sets up title, it is a matter for investigation by the general counsel for the Commission as to whether the claimant has any title such as he asserts, and it is for the Commission, under advice of its counsel, to determine whether or not the United States should accord anything to that claimant by way of recognition of his title.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the gentleman think it is somewhat dangerous to give in this bill additional burdens of office to the collector of revenue for the Canal Zone, when it is reported in the newspapers that he is not only filling that office, but also the office of superintendent of public schools and at least one other salaried office under the Government at the same time? Is he not rather too busy to attend to any such matters as these?

Mr. WANGER. I do not see that this bill imposes any very burdensome duties upon him, and I understand that he is discharging all those duties with which he is charged satisfactorily and that there is no complaint of his administration.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is it not true that in preparing this bill our committee studiously avoided all the very questions and difficulties that we have been hearing about in this debate and have made only such provisions as were necessary to the progress of constructing a canal?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly; for the construction of the canal and for the improvement of the country under the provisions of the leasing clause.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that section 4 of the original draft was stricken out because it was thought it might have the effect of recognizing these conflicting titles.

Mr. WANGER. That is true; we did not purpose that the United States should be brought into any question of that kind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Gentlemen sitting near me, who have investigated the bill, are under the impression that rights acquired before the American occupation of the Zone are not adequately protected under the bill as it reads. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] if that is true? Is there any possibility of that?

Mr. WANGER. None at all. Anybody who has any right there to land, and who is not dealt with justly by the authorities of the United States if this bill becomes a law, has his remedy in the courts which have jurisdiction to try questions of title.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. And some of those questions, let me remind my friend from Pennsylvania, are already in the courts.

Mr. WANGER. There are issues of that character pending. It was supposed that as soon as the United States acquired authority there, and there was peace and order, there would be great industrial development. That expectation has failed to this time. It is now believed that with the facilities which this bill provides for the encouragement of gardening and grazing and other land operations that there will be such development. It is believed that the passage of this bill will save the United States from claims for millions of dollars for lands taken in the construction of the canal, by reason of granting the authority to the President to convey the title of the United States to lands it does not need in exchange for lands which are taken or acquired for building the canal and its appurtenant works. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 180 gentlemen present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as favor the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 161, nays 63, answered "present" 14, not voting 149, as follows:

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 7189) for the erection of a public building at Bedford City, Va., which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the paper accompanying the bill, being a statement of facts from W. H. Mosby, postmaster at Bedford City, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Facts for consideration by Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, House of Representatives, in support of H. R. —, introduced by Mr. —, of City, Bedford City, State, Virginia.

Amount of appropriation desired, $50,000.

Is appropriation desired for site only; building only; building and site; addition to old building or increase of appropriation already secured?—Building and site.

Has any appropriation heretofore been made? If so, give amount.—None.

When was last appropriation secured?—

Does United States own site in above city?—No.

If so, how much was paid for same?—

Have you a Government building at present?—No.

If so, is it proposed to build addition or new building?—New building.

Give population according to last Federal Census.—2,472. (The corporate line at that time cut off fully one-third of the town.)

What was estimated population on January 1, 1908?—4,000 to 4,500 will be included in new corporate limits.

What were postal receipts for last fiscal year?—$11,700.

What is annual salary of postmaster?—$2,300.

Have you city free delivery?—Yes.

How many carriers?—3; 1 subcarrier.

How many clerks in post-office?—4; 1 auxiliary.

How many rural carriers?—7.

Have you a Federal court?—No.

How many terms each year?—

Have you internal-revenue office?—Entitled to 1 stamp collector and 1 internal-revenue collector.

What were internal-revenue receipts for last fiscal year?—

Have you any Government officers not mentioned above for whom accommodations are required?—Accommodations badly needed for 1 post-office inspector whose headquarters are at this place; at present postmaster has to allow him use of his private office.

How much rent per annum is paid by the United States for post-office?—$600 for present term, but demands $1,000 for next.

How much rent per annum is paid by the United States for United States courts?—

How much rent per annum is paid by the United States for internal-revenue office?—None; because postmaster allows use of private office.

How much rent per annum is paid by the United States for all other offices?—

Total rental paid by Government in above city?—$600 with almost certainty of $1,000.

In addition to above please give brief statement of any important facts, such as industries, railroads, etc.—One trunk line, Norfolk and Western Railroad. Just south of us and running through the county is the great Standard Oil Railroad. The finest woolen mill in the South; manufactures a great deal of cloth; in fact, employed nearly its entire time on contracts for the United States Government making fine cloths for use of the Army and Navy. We also have very large tobacco manufacturing plants for making plug tobaccos; also the largest smoking-tobacco factory in the State of Virginia; also four large cigar manufacturing plants; we have large warehouses for the sale of leaf tobacco, also large steam plants for rehandling leaf tobacco for foreign shipment. We have the back country extending south of us for nearly 100 miles, which does almost its entire business through this place. Our railroad depot handles an immense quantity of freight, consisting of tobacco, both leaf and manufactured; lumber, both manufactured and otherwise; also large quantities of asbestos, which is shipped here in the crude state, and which is afterwards manufactured and reshipped to all parts of the earth. There are many other industries, and small manufacturing plants almost too numerous to mention. We have two banking institutions doing a business of nearly a million dollars. To sum up, I can safely say there is hardly another town of the same population in the United States that does as much business as this. All its manufacturing plants, and business industries are in a strong, healthy, and increasing condition.

I will close with the statement that the increase in revenue will be from 15 to 20 per cent higher than the receipts of last year, and in all probability an equally as great increase in the receipts of internal revenue.

Owing to the large increase in the business of the post-office we will be compelled to have larger quarters within a very short time, as we are now sadly pressed for room to do the work efficiently.

Respectfully,

W. H. MOSBY, Postmaster.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendments.

The Secretary read as follows:

The amendment to the amendments was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the House, to be inserted immediately after the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment just agreed to the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall forthwith cause the public-land surveys to be extended over the area embraced within the exterior limits of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation in the State of Montana, and shall also cause the irrigable portions thereof not otherwise disposed of by this act to be reclaimed and disposed of under and in conformity with an act of Congress entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof.

That 160 acres of said reservation land is hereby granted to the State of Montana, the same to be selected by the governor of said State as near as may be in compact form and so as to embrace the post buildings and other improvements at Fort Keogh; and there is also granted to the incorporated city of Miles City, in said State, 160 acres of said land to be selected by the mayor of said city from land along the eastern boundary line of said military reservation; and the use and possession of 160 acres of said reservation land is hereby granted to the Custer County Fair Association, to be held, used, and enjoyed by said association only so long and to such extent as said land is devoted to the purposes of a county fair for the county of Custer; the said land to be selected by the officers of said Custer County Fair Association as near as may be in compact form and so as to embrace the fair-ground improvements now existing: Provided, That each of said tracts shall be selected by the aforesaid officials, respectively, in legal subdivisions within twenty days after the duly approved plats of the survey shall have been filed in the local land office and according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That said city of Miles City shall by acceptance of the aforesaid grant of land assume and discharge all obligations of the United States to control Tongue River in its course through the lands west of the present limits of said Miles City.

That all portions of said reservation, exclusive of the grants herein made and the possessory right given, which the Reclamation Service finds it impracticable to irrigate by artificial means, shall be subject to entry under the public-land laws.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4639) to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the invitation extended by the Imperial Japanese Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the Great National Exposition to be held in Tokyo, Japan, from April 1 to October 31, 1912. In accepting said invitation it is hereby declared to be the purpose of the Government of the United States to participate in said Japanese National Exposition by erecting suitable buildings and making an appropriate exhibit of arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil and mines and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government of the United States and an exhibit of such other articles as the President of the United States may direct: Provided, That such participation, buildings, exhibits, and all expenses connected therewith, including salaries, clerical, and other services and transportation of persons and exhibits shall not exceed $1,500,000.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three commissioners-general who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of State, take such steps as are necessary to ascertain the general plan and scope of the said National Exposition, the character, size, and cost of the buildings to be erected by the United States, and the extent and character of the exhibit authorized hereunder that would best serve the interests of the United States and its citizens, and would be best adapted to illustrate the growth and development of the country and the character of our people. That thereafter, and as soon as practicable, said commissioners shall report fully to the President and to Congress the result of such investigation, together with their recommendations and the estimated cost of said participation in said exposition within the foregoing authorization; and it shall also be the duty of the commissioners-general to report to the President for transmission to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a detailed statement of all expenditures incurred hereunder. That one of said commissioners-general shall receive as compensation for his services the sum of $8,000 per annum; that the other two commissioners-general shall receive as compensation for their services from and after January 1, 1909, $2,000 per annum for the first year and $5,000 per annum thereafter; together with the actual traveling expenses of all of said commissioners-general, including sleeping-car service and a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $5 when actually traveling in the discharge of their duties as said commissioners-general. That the President shall also appoint a secretary at a compensation of $5,000 per annum, together with his actual traveling expenses, including sleeping-car service and a per diem in lieu of subsistence of $5 when actually traveling in the discharge of his duties as such secretary, who shall act as disbursing agent and who shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him from time to time by the commissioners-general, and who shall render his accounts at least quarterly to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States, and shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may require. And the said commissioners-general, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, shall appoint from time to time such clerical and other assistants as may be necessary and as may hereafter be appropriated for in connection with the preparation of the plan and other necessary services as may be required in connection with the participation herein authorized.

SEC. 3. That upon the request of the Secretary of State the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to furnish free transportation on Government transports from San Francisco to Japan and return of all Government exhibits and for such officials or employees connected with the commission or in charge of any or all Government exhibits.

SEC. 4. That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the salaries and all other expenses herein authorized and incurred in ascertaining the general plan of said National Exposition and the preparation and report to Congress of the plan and extent of our proposed participation therein and the estimate of the amount necessary to meet the expense thereof during the fiscal year 1910, to be immediately available.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Foreign Relations have considered that amendment and have instructed me to move that the Senate concur therein.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is concurred in.

COL. WILLIAM F. STEWART.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 82) relating to certain charges against Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery. It was Table Calendar No. 17.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the following joint resolution. It has no Calendar number.

Mr. WARREN. Evidently the Senator from Maryland desires to move that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the joint resolution that is now in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. Consequently it is not on the Calendar and probably it is not on the desk.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I think the reading of the joint resolution can be dispensed with. I will state what the joint resolution is. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is not upon the table.

Mr. WARREN. As I said before, the joint resolution is not on the Calendar nor is it in the possession of the clerks at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maryland evidently wishes to discuss the matter, after which he wishes the Senate to vote to discharge the committee. That is what I understand the Senator desires to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks that the reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask what is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of Senate joint resolution 82, and he asks that the reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with. The joint resolution is not in charge of the clerks at the desk.

Mr. BURKETT. It seems to me that we ought to know something about the joint resolution. It ought to be read before action is taken on it.

Mr. RAYNER. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska what it is. It is a joint resolution with reference to the case of Colonel Stewart. The joint resolution has been read here, and during the course of the very brief argument that I shall make in the few minutes that I will claim the attention of the Senate I will state what the joint resolution is. I have a substitute to offer for the joint resolution. It is with reference to a court of inquiry in the case of Colonel Stewart.

I am satisfied that there will be no report during this session upon this resolution that I have called up. It was sent to the committee last Wednesday. I appeared before the committee upon the following day. The latest information that I received in reference to this resolution was on the next day, last Friday, when I was indirectly informed that certain papers in connection therewith had not yet arrived from the War Department. It is now Wednesday, and we are only a few days from adjournment. It is doubtful whether a messenger can start with all of these papers from the War Department to-day and by the swiftest means of conveyance reach the Senate by Saturday. It is not probable that he can make the trip within that time. It is a long and tedious journey, and it would be cruel to compel anyone to make it continuously without relaying at the White House and at other stations between one terminus and another. I do not desire to impose any unnecessary labor upon any of the Senate employees. I have measured the distance, and if a messenger with these papers was to ride five blocks a day and started from the War Department at this moment, he would not reach here until after the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. RAYNER. I respectfully decline to submit to any interruption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland declines to be interrupted.

Mr. WARREN. It strikes me that in asking unanimous consent—

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I must respectfully decline to submit to any interruption.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; I object to the further consideration of this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and under the rule the motion can not be considered to-day.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule provides that—

Mr. RAYNER. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that before I conclude I will submit to interruptions, but not just at this moment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has had his opportunity. I wished simply to correct him on a matter, but I object to the further consideration of the motion on the ground that the Senator is speaking—

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator desires to correct me in a statement of fact I am perfectly willing to yield. I think I have the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator from Maryland to have submitted a motion to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the joint resolution and that unanimous consent was given for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was not given. The Senator from Maryland submitted a motion. The rule is that "motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of a subject, and all subjects from which a committee shall be discharged, shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct." It requires unanimous consent for the present consideration of the motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rose simply to make the inquiry. I did not know how the Senator from Maryland was proceeding to make a speech except by unanimous consent, and that seemingly having been given, it could not be withdrawn by the Senator from Wyoming. That is the inquiry I submit to the President of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland did not ask unanimous consent. The Senator from Maryland moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and the Chair is of the opinion that unless unanimous consent is given the motion must lie over one day for consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. But I submit to the Chair that the Senator from Maryland was proceeding to consider the joint resolution, which he was not permitted to do except by unanimous consent, and I assumed that that consent had been given.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That consent had not been given.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I thought that I had the floor, and if it is necessary for me to ask unanimous consent to make the remarks that will take me about fifteen or twenty minutes I suppose I will have to do it. I will state to the Senator from Wyoming—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WARREN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, just a moment. I will submit to any correction of fact the Senator from Wyoming wants to make. If I made any misstatement of fact I will yield for a correction. I propose to address the Senate on the joint resolution now or at some other time. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if there has been any misstatement of fact he wants to correct. If there has been any misstatement of fact I will submit to any correction he wants to make.

Mr. WARREN. I was undertaking to assist the Senator from Maryland to get the floor. He did not proceed under the rule, and I tried to correct him. He did not proceed under the rule, and I asked leave to interrupt him and he refused. Therefore, I object.

Mr. RAYNER. I withdraw that refusal. I shall withdraw the refusal and let the Senator from Wyoming make the statement he wants.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; I have no objection if the Senator is willing to submit to brief interruptions, as is usual on the Senate floor. On the other hand, I do not expect to use two minutes of the Senator's time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. WARREN. I have a very short interruption to make.

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Before the Senator proceeds further, I wish to make an observation. I notice that he starts out on the hypothesis that the Committee on Military Affairs is not to consider this matter and report it at the present session. I wish to say to the Senator that he is in error. He has no authority, at least from the chairman of the committee, to make that statement. Of course, this fine sarcasm about how long it takes to go down to the Department and back I am willing he may indulge in to his heart's content, but I desire to say that the chairman of the committee sent a letter signed by the chairman representing the committee to the White House and to the War Department, asking for the papers bearing on this matter before the resolution itself was sent from the presiding officer's desk to the rooms of the committee, and the members of the committee have proceeded with all due diligence and speed since that time.

Having said that, the Senator can make any assertion to the contrary he wishes.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I made no such statement, and the Senator is wholly premature. I am proceeding now, I understand, by unanimous consent. I made no statement that I had any information from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I said I was satisfied there would be no report, and I am absolutely and perfectly satisfied of this; and I do not recall one word of that utterance.

Now I will proceed.

Nor do I think any advantage would be derived if this communication should be sent by mail. If it were deposited in the city post-office to-day, I am satisfied, with all the work that has devolved upon the chairman of the Military Committee, it would be utterly impossible for him to open the entire package by Saturday. It is evidently an enormous bundle, and it would have to be handled in sections.

I have no doubt the President has done everything in his power to procure the chairman of the Military Committee to make a report upon this resolution as speedily as possible, but we all realize that the President has no influence with the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee and that all his efforts in this regard must have been useless and unavailing.

It is evident that the President does not want to keep this officer at Fort Grant. All his actions tend strongly to show that he has no desire to do this. The only reason that he keeps him there is, as he has stated, that there is no other place in the United States that this officer could be assigned to, and that he has been stationed at this spot simply because there is no other spot to which he could be remitted over which the United States has any jurisdiction. It is therefore my duty to say that I appreciate the united efforts of the President and the War Department and the honorable chairman of the Military Committee to expedite this case. It is proper for me to remind the Senate, however, that while this case is being thus expedited Colonel Stewart is upon the heights of Arizona. He is at a high altitude, as explained upon a former occasion by the chairman of the Military Committee, as high as the President can get him, with very little chance of his getting down any lower within any definite period of time. Being at a high altitude, he ought not to complain. The climate is salubrious and uniform, it being as cold in winter as it is hot in summer; the surroundings are all salutary, his companions are festive and convivial, consisting of a care taker, a teamster, and several Government mules, and the society at this fashionable center is therefore extremely exclusive and select. The President is delighted with the situation, and therefore the chairman of the Military Committee ought also to be satisfied.

If the President is satisfied, everybody ought to be satisfied. Why not? What right has anybody to be dissatisfied with anything that satisfies the President? Who would be guilty of such a treasonable act? The King can not commit a wrong, and, therefore, the President can not commit a wrong. Congress may make the gravest mistakes. Courts may err. Human judgment at the zenith of its strength may arrive at faulty and erroneous conclusions, but the Executive can never blunder. Infallibility is one of his attributes. When he comes to a conclusion upon strictly ex parte testimony, his position is impregnable. When he has finished with the prosecution, and there has been no testimony allowed to be produced on the other side, he is so well fortified and intrenched that you can not dismantle him. When he has his victim upon the heights of Arizona and declines to receive any communication from him and positively asserts that there is no necessity of examining his witnesses or hearing his testimony, he is then in a position to administer justice with an absolutely impartial and unprejudiced mind. A judge who hears both sides may have his mind disturbed, but a President who hears only one side can proceed with accuracy and precision to final judgment without the slightest danger of making any mistake upon the testimony he has heard. The Constitution in Article VI gives even to a criminal the right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him; it permits him to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

The President prefers to try the case without any witnesses for the defense, because if witnesses for the defense were summoned, he defiantly proclaims, to use his own language, "they could not possibly upset the judgment that he had already rendered." This is the President's conception of justice, and his army of courtiers and flatterers, who bask in the sunlight of his favor, eulogize and applaud him. In the meantime his victim is in the wilds of Arizona. The President does not propose to hear him or to receive any communication from him whatever. He has promulgated his decree, and that is the end of it.

It behooves me in passing to say that this is not the first time that such an act of injustice has been perpetrated in the annals of persecution; it will not be the last time. How many times—

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over
In states unborn and accents yet unknown!

I want it distinctly understood now that I am not here asking any sympathy or mercy for this convicted officer—convicted in the face of human rights and constitutional guarantees. I would rather be the suffering victim than the triumphant persecutor. This officer evidently possesses a brave spirit, whatever other infirmities he may have in conjunction with the balance of the human race. No one of us is perfect; no one except the President.

I will put this resolution now in a modified form, not because I expect the President to relent, but because I want to ascertain when the Senate records its opinion whether the President will not awaken to a proper sense of his constitutional prerogative. This, then, is the somber question before the Senate: Whether it proposes to acquiesce in the proposition that the President has a right to degrade and punish an officer of the United States without a trial, or whether as Commander in Chief he is bound by the laws of the country? Is there any doubt about the principle involved? Will the American Senate long debate it? Is there a Senator here who does not think that the President has set a precedent in this case which is absolutely destructive of the cardinal principles of our institutions and which ought not for a moment to prevail in any country where free men live? Do we grasp the idea that is involved in this judgment that he has promulgated, a judgment that will enable him to inflict any sentence upon any officer without a trial, and that would make him not a commander in chief, but a military dictator in time of peace? It is too appalling to contemplate that an American Senate should sit by and permit a wrong of this sort to be perpetrated with impunity. Is there no relief? If the Senate refuses to act, the only relief that I can now think of would, perhaps, speedily come if this officer were to die in the place of his captivity. Then the country would, perhaps, come to the conclusion that no other man should ever die by the same methods. One of England's bravest admirals was shot to death upon his quarter-deck for committing an error of judgment. One of England's greatest jurists, construing the cold letter of the law, held that an error of judgment was punishable by death. Parliament never moved, but when the work was done the whole world rang in denunciation of the murderous deed.

Mr. President, I have said now upon three occasions all that I can say upon this subject. I have appealed to the President; my appeal has been in vain. I have appealed to the chairman of the Military Committee; my appeal has been in vain. I appeal now to the Senate of the United States. I have said before, and I repeat again, that there is no political consideration involved in this controversy. It has no political significance in my State whatever, and my people know that no such paltry motive as this would enter into my mind. The accused officer is not a native or resident of my State, and if it is a matter of State pride, I hope my appeal will awaken the support of the senior Senator from Rhode Island, because the officer is from that State—a State small in area, but one that has sent to this floor a leader who has not only the courage of his convictions, but a heart that responds when a question of right or wrong is involved.

I believe if a vote could be taken upon this resolution that a majority of the Senate would decide in favor of the main proposition that it embodies, and that proposition is that there is no such principle in the civil or military jurisprudence of the United States as a conviction without a tribunal to convict that has heard the case. Is there a Senator here who does not believe that this officer is entitled to be heard in his own defense? Why hesitate then to give an expression of opinion? No party question is involved in this issue. It may involve a difference with the President upon the legal phases of the subject, but what is that? When Mr. Cleveland was President a number of Senators and Representatives from his own party disagreed with him upon questions of public policy. I thought that they were wrong, and I stood with him to the end, but they gave expression to their views. If Republican Senators agree with me, why will they not give this man a right to be heard? He may have committed all the offenses that the President charges against him. Let him speak! It is only a human privilege that he asks for. Is the Republic afraid to permit an officer who has followed its flag for forty years to be heard in his own defense? It is said that he is not proscribed. Well, if he is not proscribed, what is he? He is marooned away from home and from communication and from comrades and friends and associates, practically in solitary confinement at an abandoned post, where, like the exile among the rocks of St. Helena, he can walk with his hands behind his back, looking at the stars.

The answer comes, he must retire. If he has a vestige of slumbering courage in his breast he will not retire. Retirement means disgrace without a hearing. It means eternal ignominy to his name. I do not think there is a man in this Senate who has a military record who would not under similar circumstances defiantly decline to yield to such an alternative as this. Retire? Yes, if a military tribunal decides upon a hearing that he is no longer qualified for the public service. Retire, degraded and humiliated, crushed and silenced to submission? Never while there is a spark of honor thrilling in his veins.

I have now concluded, Mr. President. I ask the Senate to give me a vote upon the resolution in its modified form as I shall present it. I may be wrong, but I feel that the Senate is with me upon the merits of the resolution. It is tied up now with a technical objection that it will not take it from the hands of the committee. I wish there were a power here that could enable me to invoke every member of the committee to express his opinion upon the subject. Let it be understood that I make no threats. I am not imbued with a threatening spirit. I shall, however, make a plain and unvarnished statement—a prophecy and not a threat. I predict that if there is no relief anywhere, if the President's resolve is the final scene in this tragedy, then something will occur that has happened over and over again before. Public opinion does not realize the situation now, all it knows is that the President has punished an officer of the Army because in his judgment he is objectionable to the service. It has not yet grasped the entire environment. It does not as yet comprehend that the President has taken a stand that no sovereign or monarch in any other civilized land would dare to take at this enlightened day. When it understands the proposition fully, then public opinion will move, it will move along the avenues of public intelligence, it will be heard through the channels of public expression, it will move slowly but surely to the place of captivity, it will take the unfortunate officer and transfer him from the custody of the President into the presence of the President, and trampling with an iron heel upon the desperate experiment of authority that the President has used, it will give to his victim, humble, unimportant, and pretensionless as he may be, the right to be heard in self-defense, a right not only accorded him by the laws of his land, but a natural right that God has given him, and which it should not lie with in the power of any potentate or ruler in the universe to deprive him of if there is any conscience or humanity in the heart of man or any justice left upon this earth.

Now, Mr. President, I submit the resolution in its modified form, and I shall ask its consideration. I first ask for the discharge of the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the resolution which was referred to it.

Can I submit the resolution now at the same time that I ask for the discharge of the committee from the consideration of the former resolution, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. RAYNER. I will read the resolution, Mr. President.

Resolved—

I have framed this resolution twice. This is the third form that I have put it in, and I can not modify it any more without destroying it—

Resolved, That Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, United States Army, is, in the opinion of the Senate, entitled to be heard, together with his witnesses, upon the charges that have been made against him and that are contained in a report to the President, and that the President is requested to convene a court of inquiry for the purpose of giving him and his witnesses the opportunity to be heard, and that the said court render its opinion upon the facts submitted after the hearing, as is usual in the proceedings of courts of inquiry.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that it is not necessary to discharge the committee from the consideration of the former joint resolution to enable him to offer the one he now presents.

Mr. RAYNER. So I understand. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first put the question. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not do that in the presence of one objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question on the consideration of the resolution will be put by the Chair to the Senate, and then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution will have to go over under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution has not yet been read to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon of the Chair; I thought the resolution had been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read to the Senate, and then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] offers a resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, United States Army, is, in the opinion of the Senate, entitled to be heard, together with his witnesses, upon the charges that have been made against him and that are contained in a report to the President.

and that the President is requested to convene a court of inquiry for the purpose of giving him and his witnesses the opportunity to be heard, and that the said court render its opinion upon the facts submitted after the hearing, as is usual in the proceedings of courts of inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from Nevada—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator from Nevada if he will not yield to me, so that I may call up the public buildings bill and have it considered in order that it may be passed and get into conference?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the bill for which I ask consideration has been pending for some time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I will say that the bill, consideration of which is asked for by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], was reported to the Senate yesterday. It is now ready for consideration. There are so many items in it and so much time will be required in adjusting the bill in conference that it seems to me it ought to have the right of way. I therefore ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to withhold his request until the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can call up the public buildings bill and have it passed. If the Senator from Nevada will not do so, I shall be constrained to object at this time to the consideration of the bill moved by him, on account of the great length of the public buildings bill and the time which will necessarily be required in its consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the bill for which I ask consideration is a very important bill. As I have stated, it has been pending some time, and unless it is considered now I am afraid I shall not be able to get consideration of it.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the title of which has just been stated.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to amend the motion—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not open to either debate or amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 21897, being the omnibus public buildings bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, on page 2, after line 3, to insert:

United States post-office at Dothan, Ala., $60,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to amend the amendment in line 4, after the word "post-office," by inserting the words "and court-house."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, on page 2, after line 11, to insert:

United States post-office and custom-house at San Diego, $75,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to amend the amendment of the committee in line 12, after the words "San Diego," by inserting the word "California."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

That the limit of cost of the United States post-office and court-house at Colorado Springs, Colo., be increased from the sum of $275,000 to the sum of $290,000, said increase to be employed in substituting granite for sandstone.

United States post-office and court-house at Ocala, Fla., $25,000.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I hope the committee—

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the bill is being read for committee amendments only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Amendments to committee amendments are in order as the reading of the bill proceeds.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Is it not in order to move to disagree to a committee amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I want to ask that the amendment be disagreed to. I ask the chairman of the committee not to insist upon the amendment. I will explain that there is an appropriation already of about $90,000 for a public building at Ocala, but the Department finds it necessary to have more money to construct and complete the building according to the plans proposed and according to the needs of the city. I hope very much that the chairman of the committee will not insist on striking out the additional amount.

Mr. SCOTT. There are only 3,380 inhabitants at Ocala. This is to increase the limit of cost for the building at that place $25,000. They already have an appropriation for a building there, and the chairman of the committee certainly hopes the Senate will sustain the committee in striking the item out.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The chairman is not advised as to the population of Ocala, Mr. President, if he insists that there are only three or four thousand inhabitants there. There are certainly not less than—

Mr. SCOTT. I have only taken the figures from the Census Bureau.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. We can not be guided to-day by the census of eight years ago. There are certainly eight or ten thousand inhabitants there, and if this money had not been necessary to complete the building it would not have been provided for by the other House. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senate will stand by the committee. It has given this bill great thought and as much consideration as possible. If the appropriations it carried are to be increased on the floor of the Senate over the large amount it now contains I am satisfied the entire bill will fail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, on page 4, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five," and to insert "seventy-one," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend not to exceed $6,250 for the purchase of additional ground west of the present site," so as to make the clause read:

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I realize the importance of getting the bill into conference, and therefore I will not ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment which has been reported by the committee, trusting that the conferees on the part of the Senate will get in conference more information in relation to the importance and necessity of an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting a public building at Catlettsburg, Ky., and that the conferees will agree to the bill as it was passed by the House. Catlettsburg is situated at the confluence of the Big Sandy and Ohio rivers. It is a growing city, being a large distributing point for the Big Sandy Valley. A Federal court is established there, and will always, by reason of its location, continue to be.

Nothing less than $100,000 will construct a building suited to the need of the governmental business at that place. I earnestly appeal to the Members who are to serve as conferees on the part of the Senate to examine carefully into the necessity for an appropriation of $100,000 for the building at Catlettsburg, and if they do so I feel sure they will agree with conferees of the House that that amount is needed. Believing it will not aid in receiving the $100,000 to ask the Senate at this time to reject the amendment proposed by the committee, I will not do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator wants to add the word "court-house," I will accept the amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. Is there a court at Miami?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Florida would not ask for the insertion of the word "court-house" if there was not.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that such things have been done.

Mr. DIXON. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment in lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 31, relative to Missoula, Mont. It has inadvertently been inserted under section 4; it should go in section 3, the site having been acquired two years ago.

Mr. SCOTT. That is right. We will change it. It is a mistake.

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At what point does the Senator from Montana wish to have the amendment inserted?

Mr. DIXON. I ask that it be transposed from page 31 to page 22, after line 9.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. We can not hear the Senator from Colorado over here.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I hope that the sum will be retained in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to strike out lines 18 and 19.

Mr. SCOTT. What amendment does the Senator object to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado wishes to have the Senate disagree to the amendment in lines 18 and 19, on page 37. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for a division.

Mr. BURKETT. We are about to vote on the committee amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. The Chair will again put the question. The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to the end of line 21, on page 37, the last item read being:

United States post-office at Greeley, Colo., $10,000.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the chairman that $10,000 will not buy a suitable site at Greeley. It is a flourishing town, and the price of land is entirely too high to expect that. I have from the Commercial Club, which is practically the chamber of commerce of that town, a communication saying the appropriation ought to be $25,000. If the Senator will allow the item to be amended, I will try to present before the conference committee some evidence showing that it ought to be $25,000.

Mr. SCOTT. This is the House appropriation of $10,000, and the Senate committee in going over it could not see any reason for changing it from the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. TELLER. I did not get the letter until yesterday, after the bill had been reported. I will say to the Senator that I will try to present before the conference proper evidence.

Mr. SCOTT. To meet the Senator's views and in order to discuss the matter in conference, I will agree to a motion to amend it by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. TELLER. I will accept that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, page 37, after the words "Greeley, Colo.," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 12, to insert:

United States post-office and other governmental offices at Cynthiana, Ky., $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 16, to strike out:

United States post-office at Lawrenceburg, Ky., $7,500.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, when the bill came from the House of Representatives to the Senate it contained a paragraph which is as follows:

United States post-office at Lawrenceburg, Ky., $7,500.

I wish to present a statement which I did not receive until last night with regard to Lawrenceburg.

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that this item will naturally come before the conferees, and the paper can be considered there.

Mr. McCREARY. It is very brief, and will take but a few moments.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sure the communication will not do any good at this time, but it can be brought before the conferees.

Mr. McCREARY. I am not going to make a motion, but this paper was sent to me, and I wish to read it, as it shows that Lawrenceburg is an attractive, important, little city:

Revenue receipts of deputy collectors' office at Lawrenceburg, Ky., according to official statement of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for fiscal years
1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, to March, 1908	$3,970,470.82
Cash post-office receipts last fiscal year	$5,284.72
Estimated franked mail last fiscal year	4,000.00
Post-office money orders issued last fiscal year	13,688.95
	22,973.67

Total 8,993,444.49

Forty-five storekeepers and gaugers, exclusive of other and special revenue officers, with headquarters at and centering in Lawrenceburg. Three national banks and two railroads connecting Lawrenceburg with the Southern States and with the Northwestern States.

This is one of the most important places for the collection of revenue that we have in Kentucky, and I very respectfully suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that as we ask only $7,500 for the construction of a post-office building at Lawrenceburg it be permitted to go in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, one moment. The postal receipts at Lawrenceburg were only $5,284, and the Government now pays a rental there of only $368. The population of Lawrenceburg, according to the last census, was only 1,253.

Mr. McCREARY. As I said before, this is one of the most important places in central Kentucky. Anderson County, in which Lawrenceburg is situated, is a large county; there are a large number of distilleries there; and the amount of revenue collected is immense. As there is a deputy collector there collecting large amounts of money, I think a public building should be erected there.

I shall make no motion, but I hope the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will agree to allow this item of $7,500 to remain in the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, if we are going to establish a precedent for buying sites for public buildings all over the United States where the population is from 1,500 to 2,500 inhabitants—

Mr. McCREARY rose.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Kentucky will please allow me to make this statement.

Mr. McCREARY. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. This bill as it came to the Senate is full of such items and, in my judgment, they ought not to be carried in the bill. The committee was careful in going over the bill. The population of Lawrenceburg in 1900 was less than 1,500. It is a small village. As we all know, when we once buy a site it means in the future that a building will have to be erected. I hope the Senate will stand by the committee in striking out this item.

Mr. McCREARY. I merely wish to correct the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia with regard to the population. The population of Lawrenceburg is now over 4,000. The place has improved very much in the last eight or ten years, since the census was taken in 1900.

Mr. SCOTT. The last official statement gives 1,253 people there.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I should like to say that I concur in the statement of my colleague with reference to the necessity of a public building at Lawrenceburg. The internal-revenue receipts there are very large indeed. The necessity for a public building exists, and I trust when the matter is discussed in conference with the conferees of the House the conferees of the Senate will reach the conclusion that the action of the House ought to be sustained. I am exceedingly anxious to have the appropriation made to purchase a site for a public building at Lawrenceburg. I could repeat the reasons given by my colleague, which show the necessity for a public building at that place, but as he has so well stated them I forbear to do so.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I do not desire to make any motion. I shall at the proper time apply to the conference to restore to the bill an appropriation of $7,500 to purchase a site for a public building at Lawrenceburg.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 18, to strike out:

United States post-office at Crowley, La., $5,000.

United States post-office at Gardiner, Me., $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 16, to insert:

United States post-office at Livingston, Mont., $15,000.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to call the attention of the chairman to an amendment on line 17. Livingston does not have an "e" at the end of the word. I think it is Livingston.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana moves to strike out the final "e," so as to read "Livingston."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 22, on page 42, the last paragraph read being as follows:

United States post-office at Rochester, N. H., $10,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. SCOTT. Before the word "thousand," in line 22, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen," so as to read "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 2, to reduce the appropriation for United States post-office at Orange, N. J., from $30,000 to $20,000.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not insist on the amendment. Orange is a very populous place and real estate is very expensive there. I suppose it is almost as expensive in Orange as in any city in the United States. I think $30,000 is the least sum that ought to be appropriated, but I shall not make any motion to amend the amendment. I hope the Senator will not insist very hard in conference on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 2, to insert:

United States post-office at Batavia, N. Y., $15,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Let the period be stricken out after the word "dollars," in line 18, so that it will be run in as one paragraph. The matter proposed to be inserted refers only to the post-office building at Salamanca, N. Y.

Mr. BURKETT. That is where we get the one hundred and ninety years' lease.

Mr. SCOTT. It is where we have to take a one hundred and ninety years' lease, and the amendment provides for it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I, of course, appreciate, as other Senators do, the difficulty in the way of arranging a bill such as this one, composed of a great many items, and especially how difficult it is to arrange the items upon any special basis.

For example, to illustrate what I mean, I observe that in Kentucky there was an allowance of $10,000 for a post-office site made by the House, and it was stricken out on the ground of an insufficient population, which I think is a very good ground, although I believe the time will come, and it ought to come, when the smaller towns will have post-office buildings suitable to their use.

There are two rather important cities in my State that I know very well about that are excluded by these Senate amendments. Making an inquiry as respects one of them, I did not press any amendment regarding either of them, but I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia and the committee having charge of the bill that in the further consideration of the measure, as I know from the amendments proposed the bill must necessarily go to a committee of conference, I hope the places that are familiar to the committee will be duly considered in connection with other places that are left in the bill by the House and put it in the bill by these amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the unfinished business will be laid aside informally, and if it is done that I may have a moment more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I should be glad to have a vote on the joint resolution, if the Senate is ready to vote on it.

Mr. DICK. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. FORAKER], I renew the request made to have the matter set aside until he may be here to be heard. He is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, one word more as respects the amount of the appropriations for sites for buildings. Of course this whole chapter relates to sites as I understand it.

Mr. SCOTT. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. It is what would be called the initiative—and a proper initiative—for the commencement in the near future and for the construction at a remoter future of public buildings.

My eye fell upon provision for a post-office building at Menomonie, Wis. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that I have been frequently a visitor at Menomonie, and I have watched with very great interest the growth and progress made in that city. I am glad the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] sits by me, who, I hope, at least, will bear out what I say as respects that city. There is not in any State that I know of a more progressive city than the little city of Menomonie of 6,000 or 7,000 inhabitants. I would be glad to have the Senator from West Virginia turn to the postal receipts of that city. I do not have them before me.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator that the interest of all Senators will be taken care of in conference. I hope that the Senator will allow the amendment to remain as it is, as we have refused the other Senators. I would almost be willing to give the Senator a public building in every town and city in his State, I feel so kindly toward him, but I think Senators very readily appreciate the situation.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator very much, but I am not through.

Mr. SCOTT. I trust he will leave this matter in the hands of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I have never had for a moment an idea of taking this matter from the hands of the committee or making any motion in relation to it. I only wanted to call the attention of the Senate, possibly with a view of having it reach the ears of the committee, to the difficult task they have to perform in this matter, and unless they do it, as I am sure they will, even in the closing hours of this session, with care, they will do injustice to several important towns.

Now, just one word more as respects the town of Menomonie. It is a city of six or seven thousand inhabitants, with banks and very large postal receipts. I am sorry the Senator did not have the postal receipts.

Mr. WARREN. I have them here.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Wyoming. It has $13,418 of annual receipts and had a population of 5,675 at the last census. It has become larger since that time. It is the educational center of the State of Wisconsin.

I do not expect to make any motion in regard to the pending item. I have no interest in the State, except that I have two or three very dear friends who reside there and who are very public spirited and have done much in an educational way for this city.

I only want to express the hope that the Senator from West Virginia and his colleagues on the conference committee will give careful attention to these cities, which, upon examination and from personal knowledge, I know to be of more value than a great many that are in the bill as it came from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator from Texas to allow this amendment to go over until after we have finished the reading of the bill, and then we shall come back to the section, if the Senator desires to make objection to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. I am willing the section shall be passed over for the present with the understanding that I reserve the point of order upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, on page 81, after line 4, to insert as a new section the following:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SCOTT. I will state that by oversight provision for the Georgetown Heights Park was left out of the bill. I therefore ask, on page 79, after line 6, that what I now send to the desk be inserted as a committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia on behalf of the committee will be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be numbered section 30, and then renumber the following sections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to be known as section 30, the following:

SEC. 30. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to acquire for a park, by purchase or condemnation, the tract of land known as "Montrose," lying immediately north of Road or R street and east of Lovers lane, on Georgetown Heights, containing 16 acres, more or less, at an expense not exceeding $150,000; and for that purpose the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That one-half of the said sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments: And provided further, That one-half of the sum that shall be annually appropriated and expended for the maintenance and improvement of said lands as a public park shall be charged against and paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in the same manner now provided by law in respect to other appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the other half shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States. If said Commissioners shall be unable to purchase said land at a price not exceeding the sum of $150,000, then they shall proceed to acquire said land in the manner prescribed for providing a site for an addition to the Government Printing Office in so much of the act approved July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the Statutes at Large, and for the purpose of said acquisition the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have and exercise all powers conferred upon the Public Printer in said act: Provided, That the public park authorized and established by this act shall be under the joint control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who is in charge of this bill, if we adopt the amendment which he now proposes, which I understand to be the Georgetown Park proposition, shall we not have then accepted in this bill provisions for five different parks—the Rock Creek Park, $400,000—

Mr. SCOTT. Rock Creek Park is not in this bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was asking the Senator from West Virginia the question.

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; it is not in this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then have we not provided for the Sixteenth-street Park, $550,000; Graceland Cemetery Park, $150,000; Georgetown Park, $150,000, and Pennsylvania Avenue Heights, $210,000?

It has been suggested by a Senator near me—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]—that Rock Creek Park is not in this bill; that it is in another bill which the Senate has passed; and that is my recollection also. So we shall have adopted at this session provisions for the purchase of five different pieces of property for public parks in this District. I will ask the Senator if that is the fact? In the confusion in the Chamber I could not be certain as to how many of those parks we have in this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the Senator from Texas is absolutely correct in his statement, but in this bill the Georgetown Park was inadvertently left out. A bill for that purpose has passed the Senate, if I recollect aright, three times. This is a very historic piece of ground in Georgetown, with beautiful trees on it, and it would connect with Rock Creek Park, as contemplated in the other bill to which the Senator refers, and would make it virtually all one park. I think that if we are going to have these parks—of course the Senator knows these things go into conference—certainly the Georgetown Park should go in, because they have no park in Georgetown. We have paid little or no attention to that historic old city over there, and I think this is a very deserving request that the people there make.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I wanted to call attention to, Mr. President, was the number of parks we are purchasing, and during the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia I have tabulated the total and find it amounts to $1,400,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I think that would be money very well spent indeed, and I think that the Members of Congress in both Houses should turn their eyes inward and look at the number of little cities all over the country that have been provided for, and not object to going ahead with the beautification and improvement of this great city of ours. I am sure the Senator from Texas is one who will stand with me in this conference. I feel confident of that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, Mr. President, we are ready to go back to the item in relation to the Paris embassy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will return to section 33.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will now state his point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was made as to the amendment inserting a new section to be known as section 33, which was passed over. The section will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 33. That the Secretary of State in authorized to purchase a site and erect a building thereon in the city of Paris, France, for the use of the embassy and for the residence of the ambassador at that capital, and for furnishing the same and, if necessary, otherwise adapting it to the needs of the service, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CULBERSON. With great confidence, Mr. President, I make the point of order against this amendment, because it has heretofore been sustained by the Chair in a general appropriation bill on the ground that it was in the nature of general legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point that this is not a general appropriation bill, but a bill specifically providing for public buildings.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair formerly sustained the point of order on a similar amendment when proposed to a general appropriation bill, and for the reasons stated by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. This amendment, however, is proposed to a bill which is not a general appropriation bill, and therefore the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$400,000" and inserting "$200,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 33, page 81, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "four hundred" and inserting "two hundred," so as to read "$200,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this subject was thoroughly discussed when the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was before the Senate. This appropriation is based on the opportunity which now exists, and which will soon pass, of purchasing a suitable embassy in Paris, which will probably cost somewhat less than $400,000, but certainly more than $200,000. To reduce the appropriation would kill the project.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, for one I do not believe that this amendment ought to be adopted. It has been stated that the reason for buying a home for our representative in Paris is that it is impossible for him to live there on the salary that he is paid. I lay down the proposition that a home that costs $400,000 can not be maintained on a salary of $17,000 per year, and the idea that we are passing this legislation in the interest of the poor man to my mind is absurd.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator overlooks the fact that in a place like Paris the main expense is the land itself. The structure while good enough is still not large, and the running of it would not be expensive nor trench upon the fortune of the ambassador.

Mr. CLAY. That may be true. It may require a good deal of salary to pay rent for suitable homes for our representatives abroad, but, Mr. President, I maintain now that a home in New York City or a home in Washington or a home in Chicago that costs two or three or four hundred thousand dollars can not be maintained on fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year. A poor man can not on such a salary afford to hire the servants necessary to keep it in order and take care of it. The argument that this legislation is in the interest of the poor men who want to go abroad, to my mind is absolutely absurd.

Mr. President, the character and reputation of our representatives abroad does not depend entirely upon the kind of houses they may occupy. Benjamin Franklin made a greater reputation abroad than probably any public man that we ever sent abroad. It is the high-class statesmanship and the high character of these gentlemen that reflect credit on the Government of the United States.

We have been extremely extravagant, Mr. President, during the present session. Appropriations have reached such a point that I do not know where we shall land after a while. Let us see. Take the agricultural appropriation bill. The agricultural appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1907-8 carried $9,457,810, while the bill for this year appropriates $12,152,406. If my calculations are correct, the total appropriations for this year in the different appropriation bills will amount to $158,000,000 more than the total for last year—an unprecedented increase in the history of this Government. Let us go further. Take the naval appropriation bill. There is an increase in that bill over the bill of last year of $22,007,652.88. Take the fortifications appropriation bill. There is an increase of $4,762,590 in that bill over the bill of last year. Take the Army appropriation bill. There is in that bill an increase of $17,052,790. Take the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There is an increase in that bill, which was a perfectly natural increase, of $809,000.

I maintain that if we adopt this amendment and that if we begin the policy of building homes for our representatives in foreign countries, in less than a dozen years it will cost the Government of the United States more than $20,000,000.

I hold in my hand a statement of our appropriations in 1896-97, 1907-8, and 1908-9. I am not going to take time to read it, but I send it to the Secretary's desk and ask that it may be inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks. It shows the gradual increase of our appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. CLAY. As was said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] we have inserted in this bill items appropriating nearly one million dollars for parks.

Mr. CULBERSON. One million four hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. CLAY. We have passed other bills—

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator is correct. This bill carries a little over a million dollars for park purposes.

Mr. CLAY. Yes. Now, Mr. President, in my opinion, we ought not to have in this bill any appropriations except for public buildings of the United States. If we desire parks in the city of Washington—and we ought to have them to a reasonable extent—the bills providing for them ought to have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; that committee ought to have considered the measures, and each one should pass upon its merits. Observation teaches me that during the closing hours of a session of Congress, when we only have a few appropriation bills to pass, there come into the Senate and are referred to the Appropriations Committee, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, all kinds of propositions for legislation which has failed elsewhere to be inserted in appropriation bills.

This amendment, if it is a proper measure, ought to have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It ought to have been considered by and passed upon by that committee. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds never has considered a measure of this kind before.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The subject has been fully considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and they were unanimous in their report. They reported it first as an amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; then they reported it a second time as an amendment to this bill; and they have reported it also as an independent bill. The committee have given it the most thorough consideration possible.

Mr. CLAY. I understand this measure was introduced and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; that the Committee on Foreign Relations referred it back to the Committee on Appropriations; and that the Committee on Appropriations inserted it in an appropriation bill, I think, the sundry civil bill.

Mr. LODGE. The committee again considered it and reported it back as an amendment to the sundry civil bill and as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. CLAY. But this bill is not the proper place where it ought to be inserted, in my judgment, if it is to be passed at all. I do not believe we ought to pay $400,000 for a residence for our representative in Paris. It ought to be bought for less than that if we are going into that business at all.

Mr. LODGE. If this bill is not a suitable bill upon which to put an appropriation for a public building, I really do not know what would be.

Mr. CLAY. Why did not the Senator refer it to the committee in the first instance? The Senator introduced this bill and had it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and after the Committee on Foreign Relations acted upon the measure it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations reported it to the Senate in an appropriation bill, and it went out on a point of order. Now, two days before we adjourn, this same amendment comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to be inserted in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purpose of keeping the RECORD right in regard to parks, which the Senator discussed a moment ago, and in answer to a suggestion that these bills ought to have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I will say to the Senator that bills providing for the parks named in this bill—and I am not going to argue the merits of them now—were all referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and each one has been either twice or three times favorably reported from that committee and has passed the Senate. So that, so far as the Committee on the District of Columbia is concerned, the Senate itself seems to concur in the view that they ought to be purchased. I simply mention this to keep the RECORD right on that point.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator can see the danger of inserting numerous bills in a public buildings bill. My observation—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAY. Just one moment, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. My observation teaches me that when a measure comes before the Senate upon its own merits and is considered separately from other measures, it receives more careful and critical attention at the hands of the Senate than it otherwise would receive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAY. Senators are deeply interested in the passage of the pending bill and Senators would be even willing to see a matter objectionable inserted in it rather than to have the bill fail. A public buildings bill is absolutely necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, I will further say regarding the parks, that in the last Congress a commission was appointed to investigate these matters, composed of the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that commission unanimously reported in favor of establishing these parks. I will go further and say, Mr. President, that at this session the Committee on the District of Columbia, being overwhelmed with work, having hundreds and hundreds of bills before it, at my suggestion sent these bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they have been considered in this Congress by that committee.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask if they have not already passed the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Each one of them, two or three times; certainly twice.

Mr. CLAY. Take the pending bill reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It carries about thirty-two or thirty-three million dollars, and that large amount in the eyes of the public is charged to public buildings.

There is inserted in this bill $2,500,000 for a building for the Department of Justice. I have no objection to it, and think it ought to be built, but I believe myself it would have been far better to have provided a separate bill in order that the public buildings bill might rest on its own merits.

There is, in this measure, an item of $2,500,000 for a building for the Department of Justice, really chargeable to public buildings and grounds. Here is an item of $400,000 for Paris, charged to public buildings and grounds. Here is $1,400,000 for parks in the city of Washington, charged to public buildings and grounds. These three parks and the new building to be bought in Paris and the building for the Department of Justice carry a larger amount than every State in the American Union. I predict that if you insert this $400,000, this pitiful sum for a home for a poor man to represent us abroad, in less than twenty years—in less than a dozen years—you will have spent more than twenty times that sum, sending the money abroad to be invested instead of keeping it at home. We are over 125 years of age. We have been represented abroad by Franklin and by Jefferson and by Adams—men who have made history at home and abroad on reasonable salaries, and they gave this country a name and character abroad of which their descendants are proud, and they did not have a $400,000 home in which to do it, Mr. President. For my part I am against the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to suggest to him that it takes more cloth now to make him a pair of pantaloons than it did when he was a boy? This country is now 125 years old, and it requires more buildings and better ones than when it was an infant.

I think the Senator did not intend to say that the amount appropriated for public buildings in the city of Washington and the parks amounted to more than all the States got. The Senator did not mean that, did he, because the largest amount—

Mr. CLAY. No; I meant more than nearly half the amount the Senate adopted. We put about $9,000,000 on this bill in the Senate. That is my recollection.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. We put on $2,500,000 for a building for the Departments of Justice and State; we placed on the bill $1,400,000 for the parks. That is $3,900,000. We put on $400,000 for the house in Paris, making four millions and nearly a half of amendments adopted by the Senate to the bill. Consequently, the amendments we have adopted—I mean for the District of Columbia and for the house in the city of Paris—amount to nearly as much as all the amendments we have adopted for the States.

Mr. SCOTT. I am very sorry that a member of my committee should be so very hostile to this bill.

Mr. CLAY. I am not hostile to the bill. I am to these two items.

Mr. SCOTT. I thought the committee had treated the Senator from Georgia very liberally, when the appropriations for the State of Georgia are nearly $600,000. I am very sorry indeed—

Mr. CLAY. One moment, with the Senator's permission. I put on this bill for Georgia less than a hundred thousand. I have not objected to a single item in this bill except the two items I have referred to.

Mr. SCOTT. Let us have a vote. I should like to get the bill passed.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on another occasion I suggested, with reference to this item of $400,000 for an embassy at Paris, that it was such a departure from the practice of the Government that Congress ought to have an opportunity to give the matter general consideration. In view of that suggestion I made the point of order when the item was proposed on another bill; and the point of order was sustained.

Mr. President, notwithstanding that, notwithstanding that I understood that there was a general consensus of opinion that the matter ought to be considered, this item is placed on what I believe to be a general appropriation bill. It is in substance and effect at least. But the Vice-President has held that it was not a general appropriation bill. The item has been put on here as an amendment at the closing hours of the session when it will be impossible for the other branch of the legislative government to give it consideration at all. A point of order—

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator from Texas know that the matter of the United States owning public buildings abroad has been considered in the House, and that bills have been reported favorably for several of them?

Mr. CULBERSON. My information is that this measure has not been considered by the other branch of Congress, and that the general subject has not been given any consideration.

I made the point of order upon this appropriation on the ground that it ought to receive general consideration, because it is an entire change of policy on the part of the Government and will force us to expend anywhere from twenty-five to one hundred million dollars before we conclude it.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], when he was on the floor a moment ago, suggested that there is an urgency about this matter because we have a kind of option on a house in Paris. I presume it is the house now occupied by the American ambassador there and about which we have heard a good deal on this floor. But under this amendment, as it appears in the pending bill, it is impossible to buy that house. I am glad of it, because I think it is an outrageous price for the Government of the United States to pay for a residence for one of its citizens, and will make it absolutely impossible for a poor man to represent us there.

Mr. WARREN. Of course the Senator understands that it is not only for a residence, but for the offices of the embassy.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that. Section 33 reads:

That the Secretary of State is authorized to purchase a site and erect a building thereon, in the city of Paris, France, for the use of the embassy and for the residence of the ambassador at that capital, and for furnishing the same and, if necessary, otherwise adapting it to the needs of the service, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

So, under this amendment, if adopted, we must buy a site and erect a building, and the fact that there is a so-called "option" upon a piece of property in Paris now occupied by Ambassador White is no reason for the adoption of the amendment.

As the point of order has been overruled, and as I believe that if we enter upon this policy at all $400,000 is too much money, the amendment pending is the one I have offered to reduce it from $400,000 to $200,000. I believe, instead of following royalty and aping the ways of royalty in snobbery, the American ambassador to Paris and our ambassadors to other capitals ought to set examples of frugality and simplicity.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this matter was brought here on another appropriation bill, and was ruled out on a point of order. It then came here as a separate proposition—as a bill. That bill has not been before the Senate. It has not been called up. As I understand, it is on the Calendar. It ought to be brought forward and discussed as a separate proposition. If we are to enter upon the policy of erecting houses abroad for our ministers, I should not oppose it, provided we have modest residences abroad in accord with the simplicity of our Republic.

Some one has sent me an editorial from a paper in the State of Massachusetts, which I desire the Secretary to read. It is short and expresses my sentiments upon this matter. I think if we are going to enter upon this policy we ought to do so on a separate measure, and not have it brought forward here at this late hour on an appropriation bill in order to force it through. I ask the Secretary to read the editorial from the Massachusetts paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Newburyport (Mass.) Daily News, Tuesday, May 5, 1908.]

A RICH HOUSE FOR A POOR MAN.

Senator OVERMAN, of North Carolina, asked a pertinent and significant question in the Senate a day or two ago, when there was under consideration the appropriation of $400,000 for an official residence for the American ambassador at Paris. "Does the Senator think," said he, "that a poor man could afford to live in a $400,000 house?" This seems to us to be a question which is more far-reaching in its import than would appear at first blush. It is undeniably true that the residences of many of our ambassadors at foreign capitals are not of the character which at all comports with the proper facilitation of the public business or the dignity which should attach to the official residence of a representative of the United States abroad. No good American wants the representative of his country in a foreign land to live in a tenement house or in a back alley. He wants him to live in a style befitting an American gentleman and the dignity of his office. But all this is in imminent danger of exaggeration. Our ambassadors are not sent abroad to "make a spread" or to "dazzle the natives," or to compete with royalty, and least of all to toady to it or imitate it. If the people of Germany, for instance, are content to furnish the Kaiser $4,000,000 for his personal living expenses that is their business; but it offers no reason or excuse for the housing of our ambassador there in a palace or for having him under the necessity of having attached to his office a large retinue of useless servants. Simplicity should characterize a representative American, not the simplicity so severe as to partake of cheeseparing or boorishness or lack of self-respect, but the simplicity sufficiently unpretentious to stamp itself with the seal of pure American democracy.

Senator OVERMAN's inquiry seems to us to be well timed. We do not believe that, even in Paris, a $400,000 palace is requisite to either the business of the embassy or to the maintenance of the dignity of the ambassador. But all this aside, there is the larger question, recurring with persistent frequency in our own communities, and involved specifically and forcibly in Senator OVERMAN's query, of whether the day is over when a poor man shall be able to hold a public station. This is a matter of supreme and emphatic importance and one which can not be too often discussed or too largely enforced upon public attention. The allegation has been made so frequently that it is as trite as the Decalogue that "a poor man can not afford to go to Congress," and this is hardly susceptible of denial. It is true that poor men do sometimes go there, but it is invariably at the cost of their personal fortunes. This was true of the late Senator Hoar and of the late Thomas B. Reed, both distinguished for a royal quality of patriotism and public spirit and unswerving honesty. The exception is said to prove the rule, and their cases are a proof that a poor man can serve in Congress, but with the highfalutin tendencies of our times it is invariably at a sacrifice. And if this be true here in our commonest public life, what would be the predicament, as Senator OVERMAN has suggested, of a foreign ambassador from this country who had to keep up a $400,000 house? Are high attainment and distinguished ability and fitness for the delicate duties of diplomacy to be sacrificed on the altar of a vainglorious toadyism?

We want our representatives abroad to be royal. But not with the royalty of caste and pomp and vain show, the symbols of the things from which the fathers sought escape when they founded the Republic; but the royalty of high and independent ideals of life and action, of just pride in the true essence of American citizenship; the royalty with which John Adams was clothed when in a plain suit of black he entered the court of St. James as the first American ambassador, between lines of gold-bedecked and bedizened diplomats from every quarter of the globe; the royalty which Samuel Adams proclaimed in Faneuil hall and Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln have made sacred, and which gives every American who possesses it the right to paraphrase the old Roman and say with pride which lifts the heart of every man who utters it into supernal atmosphere, "I am an American citizen!" Not a serf; not an imitator; not an apologist; but an American citizen clad in a civic righteousness and dignity which can be the panoply of the citizen of no other nation on the face of God's green earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], to strike out "four" and insert "two," in line 3, on page 81 of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. STONE]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent. I transfer it to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. He is not present. I transfer the pair to my colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 37, as follows:

So Mr. CULBERSON's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say one word before the vote is taken on the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to modify the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I voted against the proposition to strike out $400,000 and insert $200,000. It occurred to me, when I was considering which way I should vote, that if in my town, Macon, a place of thirty-five or forty thousand inhabitants, the Congress of the United States considered that it required $300,000 to put up a suitable building, conformable to the dignity and standing of the United States Government, in which there should be a post-office and a court room—that building is about completed, and that is the amount it will cost—in view of that expenditure of $300,000, it seemed to me that $200,000 certainly was not enough in the city of Paris, where, I presume, the price of property is fully twenty or thirty times as high, for the purpose of erecting a building in which there should be accommodations not only for a residence for the American ambassador, but for all the offices connected with the embassy.

Mr. President, when the matter was before the Senate heretofore I expressed my views in regard to it, and I do not intend to repeat them at length. This matter has been before the Foreign Relations Committee twice, and upon full consideration there was not a dissenting vote in that committee as to the adoption of the measure providing this amount of money for the embassy in Paris.

As we are talking about a change of policy, there is a change of policy which I most decidedly favor. The present policy of the Government is one under which nobody, unless he is a millionaire, can represent this Government as ambassador at a court in Europe. I want to change that policy. Mr. President, the best class of public men are those who have not been able to give their time to the accumulation of riches. They have considered something more important than the accumulation of riches, and have given their time with assiduity to the accomplishment of higher aims.

Under the present policy that class of men is absolutely debarred from representing the Government abroad. The proposition that they are debarred is proven by the fact that we have no other than that class of men in the public service representing the Government abroad, and no other class of men can accept or fill one of these appointments under our present policy. It takes all of the salary of an American ambassador to pay his house rent. That is a policy I want to see changed in the interest of men of moderate means.

What I want, Mr. President, is this: I am not particular about the amount, although I am not afraid to vote the amount that I think is the proper amount, but it does become the Congress of the United States to determine what shall be the class of buildings which shall be occupied by our representatives abroad, and when we have determined upon the class of buildings as the proper class, to make provision for them and compel our representatives abroad to live in them. Not only am I opposed to the policy which limits the holding of the office of ambassador to millionaires, but I am opposed to a policy which will make it a matter of extreme mortification for a man to go as a representative abroad and have to succeed some multimillionaire who has lived in a palace and who has been given to a mode of life that no man, unless he is a multimillionaire, can in anywise follow.

I want it so that if a man who is a multimillionaire goes to London or Paris or Berlin he will not be permitted to live in a palace, but he shall be required to live in the building which the Government furnishes, and that he shall not be able to live in a style which will make it a matter of mortification to his successor to have to live in a very much more humble style.

If the Senate of the United States had seen proper to adopt $200,000, I should have been content with the judgment of the Senate. If $400,000 is, in the judgment of Congress, the proper amount, I will also be content. But whatever is the amount, let us determine upon it, and let us not only provide a place where our ambassadors may live, but a place in which they shall be compelled to live, and not let one man live in a different style from the style of another who may go there to succeed him and who can not live as his predecessor did.

I have illustrated it by my own town, a small place of thirty-five or forty thousand inhabitants—probably, with the suburbs, 50,000. But we have numerous illustrations in the bill before us. Four hundred thousand dollars is proposed as the proper amount to be included in this bill for the purpose of an embassy in Paris, or for the purchase of grounds and the erection of an embassy, and yet in this public-buildings bill now before us little villages are provided with over $100,000 to erect post-office buildings. Then let us compare and consider the difference in the price of land and of buildings and of the character of building which is required. Compare that expenditure in 100 different instances in this bill with the provision of $400,000 for an embassy in Paris, which is not only to be the home of the ambassador, but to provide all the offices for the transaction in Paris of the diplomatic business of the Government of the United States with the Republic of France, and including a large proportion of the business arising out of the commercial relations of the two countries.

Mr. President, I will not stop to illustrate, as I did before, by the fact that we live here, we who are now talking about economy, in a building that cost $15,000,000, when, if we were simply considering matters of utility, we could be accommodated in a building that cost $100,000. That is not the way we do business. It is not the consideration by which we were influenced when we erected the building for the House of Representatives on the south side of this square. It is not the way the Senators did when they provided a building costing $4,000,000 across the way for the offices of Senators. Why did we not provide for a building of $100,000 if we wished to be so plain and unostentatious? We could have very easily built one for $100,000 which would have been comfortable and which would have answered every practical purpose for Senators' offices; but it is not considered as consistent with the dignity and importance of the Government of the United States that any such parsimony should control us in making these expenditures. Therefore instead of $100,000, which would have been sufficient for office buildings for Senate and House, we appropriated three or four millions for each of them. The people of the United States are justly proud of this Capitol building and of the other public buildings in Washington and throughout the country. The people in every community are proud of the public buildings which the Government is erecting in the cities and towns throughout the country, and there is abundant evidence of their approval of such expenditures as are found in this very public-buildings bill now before us. The people who wish these creditable buildings at home would be ashamed for us to have a mean and disreputable embassy building abroad. My main desire is, however, that we may own our embassies, in order that millionaires may no longer enjoy a monopoly, as they now do, of representing the United States as ambassadors to foreign courts.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I did not care to say anything about this matter, but I feel compelled to do so. I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations and I have had that honor for some time.

I did not vote for this proposed amendment in committee. On the contrary, I repeatedly dissented from it. I repeatedly said that I had been advocating for twenty years or more this policy of providing residences for our ambassadors and ministers abroad, but I did object to the sum.

Now, I do not know what houses are worth in Paris or anywhere else, but I do know that you can rent in every capital of Europe for half what you can rent in the capital of Washington, and I presume that the price of property has some sort of relation to its rent, to its income-earning power.

I entirely concur in what was so well said by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BACON], in the policy of allowing these places to be open to men who have brains and capacity and character to represent this country abroad. I would be very glad of an opportunity to rescue it from that class who seem now to have the monopoly—the millionaires; but we, by building these palaces abroad and decorating European capitals with fine houses, are preparing for the certain lease for all future time of millionaires upon these ambassadorships, because I would like to see a poor man or a man of moderate means go to Paris and maintain a $400,000 house on his salary or on double or treble or quadruple his salary. These kind of houses are simply securing in perpetuity the sole monopoly of ambassadorships for millionaires, for no poor man could keep up such an establishment as we are providing for.

I have believed that $200,000 was quite sufficient in any capital of the world for the residence of our ambassadors or our ministers. In Seoul, I believe, we paid $2,500 for a house, and in Tokyo, with over a million population, we paid $15,000. I felt perfectly certain that with an expenditure of $200,000 sufficient and ample accommodation could be had for our ministers abroad to appear in the most respectable manner.

When Benjamin Franklin was at the politest court in the world, the most courteous and the most ostentatious in luxury and fashion, he did not wear a cocked hat and gold lace and orders all over his coat, nor a gold-hilted diamond-mounted sword. He went about in the plain black clothes of an American citizen, with a plain walking stick; and the Franklin hat and the Franklin stick became the fashion of Paris. If we send men of sufficient character abroad it need not be said that their character can be enhanced by the house in which they live. I recollect that when Mr. Jefferson succeeded Benjamin Franklin and was presented to the King he said, "You have come to take the place of Doctor Franklin." "No," said Mr. Jefferson, "no man can take his place, but I succeed him."

The illustration which my friend from Georgia drew of the public building in his town I do not think is a very happy one. There is a public building within 6 miles of my house, which I secured here by the kindness of the Senate, and which cost $125,000. It is in a little town of 10,000 inhabitants. But that building accommodates the Federal court, which has the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the district. It also accommodates the internal-revenue offices and the customs collections for that district, and it accommodates the post-office for that town. There is a multitude of clerks occupying that building. It is not there because it is a luxury, but because it is a necessity. I think you will find that all the public buildings are very much of that character.

Now, when it comes to decorating this town with suitable buildings, this ought to be the finest capital in the world. The first time I visited Washington, that is, since the war—I was here when it did not amount to anything, when a boy—I thought that this square here ought to have all around it more public buildings, and I would be very sorry, for the sake of the great Republic and its magnificent capital, to see a building that was less ornate, less substantial, less imposing, than those being erected to-day. I do not suppose there is a man who has traveled who has seen anywhere in the world such buildings as we have on this hill and elsewhere in this capital. They comport with the dignity of the greatest Republic that ever existed, and the greatest, perhaps, that ever will exist.

I have made these remarks because I did not want to be in the attitude of a man condemning the policy, and I did not want to be in the attitude of a man who voted one way in committee and voted another way in the Senate. I would have been willing to let it pass sub silentio so far as I am concerned, but as the Senator from Texas moved the amendment, and it suited my views exactly as to the proper line to adopt, I thought I ought to express myself as I have done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify the phraseology of the section by striking out lines 23 and 24, on page 80, in the following words:

That the Secretary of State is authorized to purchase a site and erect a building thereon in the city of

And inserting in lieu the following:

That the Secretary of State is authorized to purchase a site with a suitable dwelling thereon or a site on which a suitable building shall be erected in the city of.

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept the amendment to the amendment. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. LODGE. If the chairman will permit me, I think there is a verb lacking at the end of the paragraph to govern the noun "dollars." On page 81, line 3, before the words "four hundred," I move to insert the word "and," and in line 4, after the word "necessary," I move to insert "is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. CULBERSON. Manifestly the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is intended to reform the section so that the particular house in Paris shall be purchased. I will ask him frankly if that is not so.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. It was the purpose of the amendment not to deprive the Government of the right to buy a lot of land without a building on it. As the amendment was reported from the committee I think they would have been obliged to buy a vacant site and erect a building, which would be very much more expensive. This gives them the opportunity to do either.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is what I suggested; but when the Senator was first on the floor to-day on this matter he stated that it was urgent to pass the measure now, because of a certain situation in Paris, and I took it that it was with reference to an option on the building now occupied.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true. Owing to the settlement of an estate there is an opportunity to buy at a very favorable price a suitable building and 27,000 square feet of land. Senators will remember that Paris is a city of some 3,000,000 inhabitants, and Washington is a city of 350,000. If they will figure out what it would cost to buy 27,000 square feet of land on Dupont circle or Lafayette square, I think they will see that this is not an excessive price in a great capital carrying a house furnished and complete.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know whether the Senator is in possession of the information, but if he is and is authorized to state it, I ask him what the option is on this property?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that any price has been set. I understand this property belongs to an estate in process of settlement, and there is an opportunity to buy it before the present lease expires.

Mr. CULBERSON. So far as the Senator is advised there is no particular amount set.

Mr. LODGE. I have not known of any price fixed.

Mr. BACON. I understand the amendment does not limit the purchase to any particular tract.

Mr. LODGE. Not the least. It does not limit it in any respect. They can buy a site and build, or buy this site and house, or any other house or site.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. On page 2, line 16, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen," so as to read:

United States post-office at Boulder, Colo., $15,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope it will not be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. On page 37, after line 17, I move to insert:

United States post-office at Durango, Colo., $10,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. I move, on page 44, after line 16, to insert:

United States post-office and court-house at Durant, Okla., $15,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. CLAY. May I ask if that amendment has been accepted by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SCOTT. It has not.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GORE. I have a communication which I ask to have printed in the RECORD for the use of the committee of conference.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1908.

Hon. T. P. GORE, United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The Supervising Architect, in his report to the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, dated January 20, 1908, estimated that the requirements of Oklahoma City called for a building costing about $425,000.

The branches of the Federal service to be provided for there are the post-office, United States courts, railway mail service, food inspection, animal inspection, special pension examiner; with, probably, eventually, customs service and internal-revenue service.

In 1900 Oklahoma City had a population of 10,037. By the United States census of 1907 it was shown that it had a population of 32,452 within the incorporated limits, which are not coextensive with the city, and an additional population of 6,233 in the immediate suburbs, a grand total of 38,685. Recently over one-half of this outlying population has been taken into the incorporated limits. The population of the county was 55,849.

The post-office receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, were $26,771; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, they were $166,851; and for the twelve months ending March 31, 1908, they were $185,623.04.

This tremendous percentage of gain can not be matched during this decade by any other city of the same class in the United States, bar none, from Puget Sound to the Gulf of Mexico.

We base our claim for an appropriation of $425,000 on the merits of the case, and what Congress has deemed necessary for other cities of our class.

I find that by the act of March 3, 1901, the limits of cost on a post-office and court-house at Salt Lake City (not including site) was raised from $300,000 to $500,000; but the post-office receipts of Salt Lake City for the fiscal year of 1901 were only $146,222; nearly $40,000 less than those of Oklahoma City at the present time.

I find that by act of March 3, 1903, the limit of cost of a post-office at St. Joseph, Mo., was raised from $390,140.66 to $500,000 (including $18,000 for additional ground), yet the postal receipts for the preceding fiscal year (1902) were only $182,604, slightly less than the Oklahoma City receipts for the past twelve months, viz, $185,623.04. The St. Joseph building is denominated in the Supervising Architect's report as a post-office only. Our building must accommodate the United States courts as well. It may be urged that St. Joseph had a population at that time in excess of 100,000. It is not the number of population that counts so much as the business that is to be transacted, and if 40,000 people in Oklahoma City can do as much business and produce as much revenue to the Government as 102,000 in St. Joseph, certainly we are entitled to equal facilities.

I find that by act of June 30, 1906, at Tacoma, Wash., and Spokane, Wash., the limit of cost of building and site was in each city raised from $500,000 to $600,000, approximately $100,000 having been paid for a site in each case. At the time the original authorization was made the receipts of Spokane were (1902) only $113,311, and Tacoma was under $100,000. But on June 30, 1906, when the increase was made, the receipts of Tacoma for that year were only $141,295, $42,000 less than the current receipts of Oklahoma City. Spokane's receipts for 1906 were $221,477, a gain of $35,000 over the preceding year, but Oklahoma City has made a net gain of $44,000 in the last fiscal year (1906 to 1907).

Notwithstanding the financial troubles, Oklahoma City has scored heavy gains during every one of the last six months. The gains for January and February of this year over January and February of last year were 18 per cent and 20 per cent, and the total receipts for the twelve months ending March 31, 1908, were, as above stated, $185,623.04. This exceeds the receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, of such cities as:

Galveston, Tex., with .....	$126,150
Charleston, S. C., with .....	138,932
Wheeling, W. Va., with .....	163,507
Mobile, Ala., with .....	167,386
Knoxville, Tenn., with .....	191,520
Wichita, Kans., with .....	159,386
Tacoma, Wash., with .....	173,424
Little Rock, Ark., with .....	174,955

There is every prospect that we will continue to gain at the rate of $40,000 to $50,000 a year for an indefinite period.

Respectfully, yours,

GEORGE M. FLICK.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are just two verbal changes that I desire to have made. On page 81, line 16, I move to insert the word "That" before the words "The Secretary," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 82, line 12, I move the same amendment, inserting the word "That" at the beginning of the line, so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CARTER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 671) to construct a road along the south bank of the Anacostia River, and I submit a report (No. 679) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a matter of some urgency, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, page 1, line 11, before the word "said," to insert "grounds adjacent to;" and in line 14, before the word "side," to strike out "southeast" and insert "southwest," so as to make the section read:

That within ninety days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute proceedings to condemn the land that may be necessary for a road along the Anacostia River, beginning in Giesboro Manor near the center of Omaha street extended and on the right of way of the outfall sewer; thence northeast along or near the line of said outfall sewer to the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane, connecting through the grounds adjacent to said hospital as hereinafter provided; thence from the north side of said grounds through the Barry farm northeastwardly and adjacent to the southwest side of the Alexandria branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to Howard avenue; said right of way to have a width of 90 feet south of the hospital grounds and to have a width of 60 feet through the Barry farm; the said proceedings to be had under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the said road, together with the costs and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, under the provisions of section 491 g of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code of Law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "of," to strike out "the Interior" and insert "War;" in line 14, before the word "foot," to strike out "fifty" and insert "ninety;" in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "one;" in line 15, before the word "of," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "eastward" and insert "westward;" in line 16, after the word "grounds," to insert "adjacent;" and in line 17, before the word "the," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "of" and insert "to," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to open for use as a public thoroughfare a 90-foot strip of land from 35 to 100 feet westward of the right of way of the Alexandria branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company through the grounds adjacent to the Government Hospital for the Insane, said strip to be hereafter under the control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD SIDING TO UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20120) to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Page 2, line 23, strike out the period after the word "same" and insert a colon and add: "Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall, as far as consistent with the public interests, cause said railroad track to be located on public grounds and streets."

Page 4, line 3, strike out the proviso beginning in line 3, page 4, "Provided, That upon the completion of the branch track herein," etc., and ending with the word "appropriated" in line 14.

Page 6, line 6, strike out the period after the word "Commissioners" and insert a colon and add: "Provided, That in case any other railroad company may desire to connect with the track herein authorized and required to be constructed, it shall have the right so to do; such connecting road shall have the right to use the track herein authorized on terms and conditions satisfactory to the said Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, or in case of failure to agree on terms and conditions of joint use, then on such terms and conditions as the supreme court of the District of Columbia may determine to be equitable and just."

And the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS H. CARTER,
E. S. BURKETT,
Managers on the part of the Senate,
J. HAMPTON MOORE,
JOHN H. FOSTER,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 3153. An act to make Monterey and Port Harford, in the State of California, subports of entry, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7653. An act to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15841. An act to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes;

H. R. 17703. An act to amend section 4885 of the Revised Statutes;

S. R. 51. Joint resolution providing for additional lands for Idaho under the provisions of the Carey Act; and

H. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution.

COASTWISE PASSENGER TRAVEL.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably the bill (S. 7172) concerning the transportation of passengers coastwise, and I submit a report (No. 680) thereon. As it is very urgent, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that no foreign vessel shall transport passengers between ports or places in the United States, either directly or by way of a foreign port, or for any part of the voyage, under a penalty of $200 for each passenger so transported and landed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INJURIES SUSTAINED BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 21844.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the bill be first read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think that is the bill as to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], stating that he had to leave this afternoon, asked, if it came up, that it go over. I did not catch the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] in regard to the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would say to the Senator from Minnesota that the necessity for the present consideration of this bill, if it is to be considered at all, appears from the fact that it has already passed the other House and is a bill that nearly everybody wants to have passed if it is in acceptable form. Therefore I would ask that the bill be now read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and was interrupted by.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the bill is read any further, I desire to ask from what committee it comes?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON. On what day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 18th of the present month.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I did not catch the inquiry of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desired to know from what committee this bill came.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to read the bill. While I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I was not able to attend the meeting on Monday last in consequence of a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am also a member. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will not permit the bill to go over until to-morrow, so that I, with other Senators on this side of the Chamber who desire to do so, may read the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no disposition at all to crowd the matter except, I will say, that I hope the Senator will see the necessity of early action upon the bill if action is to be had at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish the bill to go over simply to enable me as an individual Senator to read it, I not having been able to attend the meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary on Monday last.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no objection to the bill going over if it can be now read. I ask that the reading of the bill may be completed at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will complete the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when, after the passage of this act, any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor work or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, is injured in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to receive for one year thereafter, unless sooner able to resume work, the same pay as if he continued to be employed, such payment to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured. All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 2. That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow, or a child or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent parent, such widow and child or children and dependent parent shall be entitled to receive, in equal portions, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, the same amount, for the remainder of the said year, that the husband, or father, or son would be entitled to receive as pay if he were alive and continued to be employed: Provided, That if the widow shall die at any time during the said year her portion of said amount shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries under the provisions of this section, if there be any; and if any child shall arrive at the age of 16 years during the said year, the portion of such child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any.

SEC. 3. That whenever an accident occurs to any employee embraced within the terms of the first section of this act, and which results in death or a probable incapacity for work, it shall be the duty of the official superior of such employee to at once report such accident to the head of his bureau or independent office, and his report shall be immediately communicated through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom; second, whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; third, whether the accident was due to negligence or misconduct on the part of the employee injured; fourth, any other matters required by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe. The head of each Department or independent office shall have power, however, to charge a special official with the duty of making such reports.

SEC. 4. That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act or their legal representatives shall, within ninety days after such death, file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor an affidavit setting forth their relationship to the deceased and the ground of their claim for compensation under the provisions of this act. This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than thirty days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall, within a reasonable period after the expiration of such time, file with his official superior, to be forwarded through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an affidavit setting forth the grounds of his claim for compensation, to be accompanied by a certificate of his attending physician as to the cause and nature of the injury and probable duration of the incapacity, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall find from the report and affidavit or other evidence produced by the claimant or his legal representatives, or from such additional investigation as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct, that a claim for compensation is established under this act, the compensation to be paid shall be determined as provided under this act and approved for payment by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 5. That the employee shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination, to be provided and paid for under the direction of the Secretary, and if he refuses to submit to or obstructs such examination his right to compensation shall be lost for the period covered by the continuance of such refusal or obstruction.

SEC. 6. That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under this act to which the person is not entitled shall be deemed a misdemeanor on his part and punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix the time for the beginning of such payments and to provide such rules and regulations in regard thereto as he may deem proper. The purchaser of any Indian allotment, purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon, shall be exempt from any and all charge for construction of the irrigation system incurred up to the time of such purchase. All lands allotted to Indians shall bear their pro rata share of the cost of the operation and maintenance of the system under which they lie.

"When the payments required by this act have been made for the major part of the unallotted lands irrigable under any system and subject to charges for construction thereof, the management and operation of such irrigation works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such form of organization and under such rules and regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 24. That the tracts of land remaining unsold in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache reservations under the act of June 5, 1906, and also under the act of June 6, 1900, shall be again and at once offered for sale and sold under the provisions and terms of said act of June 5, 1906; Provided, That said lands shall be sold under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and for not less than $1 per acre; And provided further, That any purchaser of said land may, at his option, pay the entire amount that is due in cash for such land and receive his title therefor without the necessity of actually settling thereon; Provided further, That before offering said lands for sale the Secretary of the Interior shall allot 160 acres of land to each child of Indian parentage born since June 5, 1906, whose father or mother was a duly enrolled member of either the Kiowa, Comanche, or Apache tribe of Indians and entitled to allotment of land under the act of June 5, 1906, opening said Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache reservations to settlement, said allotments to be made of lands remaining unsold known as the pasture reserves in said reservations.

The Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules and issue all necessary instructions to carry the provisions of this act into effect; Provided, That any person who heretofore entered any of said land under said act of June 5, 1906, shall receive patents therefor by paying all the deferred installments of purchase money and proving compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws at any time after the expiration of ten months from the date of his entry.

SEC. 25. That whenever the President is satisfied that all the Indians in any part of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico and Arizona created by Executive orders of November 9, 1907, and January 28, 1908, have been allotted, the surplus lands in such part of the reservation shall be restored to the public domain and opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President.

SEC. 26. That the time of complying with the terms of article 6 of the agreement with the Alsea and other Indians on Siletz Indian Reservation in Oregon, approved August 15, 1894, as follows: "It is further stipulated and agreed that any religious society or other organization now occupying under proper authority, for religious or educational work among the Indians, any of the lands in this agreement ceded, shall have the right for two years from the date of the ratification of this agreement (same date as bill) within which to purchase the land so occupied at the rate of $2.50 per acre, the same to be conveyed to such organization or society by patent;" be extended to one year from date of approval of this act in favor of any such religious society or organization heretofore described as can prove that it has maintained religious or educational work among the Indians as contemplated in the original act. The amount of land to be so conveyed shall not exceed 10 acres.

SEC. 27. That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to consider and adjudicate the claim of Clarence W. Turner, of Muskogee, Okla., against the Creek Nation for the destruction of personal property and the loss of the pasture of the said Turner by the action of the Creek authorities, with full equity jurisdiction with the right of appeal in either party to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that the amendments being stated at the desk are committee amendments, and I rise to inquire if it would be now in order to offer an amendment at this point?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. BAILEY. I think just at that particular point an amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk should be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 28. That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear, consider, and adjudicate the claims against the Mississippi Choctaws of William N. Vernon, J. S. Bounds, and Chester Howe, their associates and assigns, for services rendered and expenses incurred in the matter of the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation, and to render judgment thereon on the principle of quantum meruit in such amount or amounts as may appear equitable and justly due therefor, which judgment, if any, shall be paid from any funds now or hereafter due such Choctaws as individuals by the United States. The said William N. Vernon, J. S. Bounds, and Chester Howe are hereby authorized to intervene in the suit instituted in said court under the provisions of section 9 of the act of April 26, 1906, in behalf of the estate of Charles F. Winton, deceased. Notice of such suit or intervention shall be served on the governor of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney-General shall appear and defend the said suit on behalf of the said Choctaws.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer an additional section to the bill (S. 6447), which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 29. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make an allotment to Herman Lehman (Montechema), an enrolled member of the Comanche tribe of Indians, who did not get an allotment, of 160 acres of unappropriated and unallotted land from the lands to be disposed of under the act of Congress approved June 5, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 213), and patent shall issue therefor in fee simple.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment just offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and agreed to, I ask to have printed in the Record a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 23, 1908.

Hon. T. P. GORE, United States Senate.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 14, 1908, transmitting a copy of a bill providing for the allotment of a quarter-section of land to Herman Lehman, together with copies of correspondence concerning this man's claim to recognition as a member of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribe of Indians.

As the papers indicate, his enrollment for the purpose of sharing in the money benefits going to these Indians has been approved by the Department, but his application for the purpose of enabling him to be allotted was denied on the ground that the law did not authorize it.

There can be no objection, in my judgment, to the enactment of such a measure as you propose; but it is believed that the provision as to a canceled allotment in the pasture lands is unnecessary. I would suggest that an item of form like the inclosed will cover the case. It can be treated as a separate bill by being preceded by a proper enacting clause, or it can be incorporated with some other bill.

I note that there is some reference to the fact that the proof submitted by Mr. Lehman concerning his incapacity to labor for a living does not show how or when his wounds were incurred. For your information, I am informally advised from a source in which I have confidence that the tendons of this man's hands appear to have been cut, that his arms and legs are covered with scars evidently made by ropes, and that his body bears many scars from wounds inflicted by torture, no doubt at the time he was captured. It is said that his body was pierced with burnt sticks, and other fiendish outrages committed, and the effect is plainly to be seen.

There are sufficient lands in the pasture reserve remaining unsold to give him an allotment if the Congress will authorize it before the lands are sold. I think there will be ample time to pass the measure before another sale can take place.

Very respectfully,

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

Mr. GORE. I also send to the desk Senate bill 2892, which I offer as an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, as new sections, the following:

SEC. 30. That all moneys forfeited under the regulations issued October 19, 1906, by the Secretary of the Interior under the act entitled "An act to open for settlement 503,000 acres of land in the Kiowa-Comanche and Apache Indian Reservation in Oklahoma Territory," approved June 5, 1906, be repaid to the persons by whom such moneys were deposited in every case where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the bid upon which the award was made was the result of a clerical error, or was due to an honest mistake on the part of the bidder as to the numbers, the description, or the character of the land upon which his bid was made.

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall make all necessary rules and issue all necessary instructions to carry the provisions of this act into effect, and the payment of the deposits herein provided for shall be paid out of any moneys deposited in the Treasury of the United States as the proceeds arising from the sale of lands under said act of June 5, 1906, and an appropriation, sufficient in amount to cover such case, is hereby made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask if that bill has ever been reported to the Senate?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the bill has been reported to the Senate, has passed the Senate, and been favorably reported in the other House, but the rush of business makes it improbable that it will pass unless as an amendment on this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk, which I ask to have added as an additional section to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 31. That 20 per cent of the proceeds arising from the sale of the south half of section 30, township 2 north, range 11 west of the Indian meridian in Oklahoma, is hereby appropriated, to be available immediately after such sale, to begin construction of a courthouse and post-office building at Lawton in said State, to cost not more than $100,000; and all acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer to the bill. I will say that it is a bill which has been read here and which has passed the Senate a couple of times. It was amended somewhat in the House committee and reported over there. If the Senate does not care to hear it read, I would say it has been read, with the exception of something that the House added.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 32. That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe from the United States under the treaty between the United States and the said Omaha tribe of Indians, ratified and affirmed March 16, 1854, or any other treaties or laws, or for the misappropriation of any funds of said Omaha tribe for purposes not for its material benefit, or for failure of the United States to pay said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal or equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket. If any question is submitted to said court, it shall settle the rights, both legal and equitable, of both the Omaha tribe of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof in said cause shall be deemed a final settlement of all claims of said Omaha Indians against the United States. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, subject, however, to amendment, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Omaha tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Omaha Indians under the contract filed in the Indian Office on the 4th day of March, 1898, and reported upon to the Secretary of the Interior on the 1st day of May, 1901, upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verification shall be necessary.

The attorneys of record shall be furnished with official letters, papers, reports, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, which may be used in evidence if competent under the rules of said Court of Claims: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians: Provided further, That the Otoe and Missouri Indians, of Oklahoma, are hereby authorized to intervene in the said action and set up and have determined any right or interest they or either of them may have or claim to have in said claim; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Otoe and Missouri Indians, of whatsoever nature, which either or both of said tribes of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the determination of the amount, if any, due either of said tribes from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress or the unexecuted stipulations of any treaties, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of either of said tribes for purposes not for their material benefit, or for the failure of the United States to pay either of said tribes any money due.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 33. That H. C. Linn and Samuel Powell be, and are hereby, permitted to bring suit in the Court of Claims for whatever amount may be reasonably due them, if any, under their contract in writing, dated October 28, 1899, with J. H. Dick, an attorney for certain Cherokee Indians known as "Eastern" or "Emigrant" Cherokees. The said court is hereby given jurisdiction to entertain said suit and render final judgment therein, payable out of the amount appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, to pay the final judgment rendered by said court in the consolidated causes, lately pending therein, Nos. 23195, 23214, and 23212. In said suit the said J. H. Dick and the said Eastern or Emigrant Cherokees, collectively, shall be named as defendants, and the court may require such other person or persons to be made parties as may to the court seem proper for the equitable adjustment of the matter in controversy and for such purpose as the court may designate. Upon the institution of such suit written notice thereof to said Eastern or Emigrant Cherokees may be given by service on the Secretary of the Interior personally and notice of said suit to the other defendant or defendants shall be given by publication or otherwise, as the court may direct. Pending final judgment in said suit so much of the amount heretofore appropriated by the act of June 30, 1906, as aforesaid, as may be necessary to pay said judgment shall be withheld from distribution.

Mr. KEAN. I will ask the Senator is there any limit to the amount that the lawyers may collect for their fee in this case?

Mr. LONG. Whatever the court finds is due under their contract. There is a certain percentage.

Mr. KEAN. There is a contract?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I think it is a bad bill—

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Has this amendment ever been referred to any committee and considered by it?

Mr. LONG. This amendment is in the form in which it was reported from the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLAY. It strikes me that we are inserting all the Indian claims of every nature, class, and kind as amendments in this bill. If these are proper amendments they ought to have been inserted in the bill when it was before the committee, but they have simply been placed upon the bill since it came to the Senate, and it would seem that the Committee on Indian Affairs did not desire to insert these amendments when the bill came from that committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The situation is this: Most of these matters have already passed the Senate or have passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. This has not.

Mr. CLAPP. I will get to that in a moment. All of these matters have either been reported by the House or Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. In the House they prepared this bill and left off some of the matters that had been reported in the House, the Members interested, I presume, being engaged in other matters. These are the amendments that are now being offered.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, I will ask if this House bill has been referred to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, or are we acting on it without its having been referred?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; the bill was passed, I think, day before yesterday, but owing to the fact that we are near adjournment the Senate Committee got the blueprint of the bill, held their meeting, and went over these items. With the exception of the amendments which are now being offered by Senators individually—

Mr. CLAY. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. This is a report of the Indian Committee, who went over the subject and added these other measures to the House bill.

Mr. CLAY. You mean the amendments that have been adopted?

Mr. CLAPP. I say all the amendments, except those that have been offered individually by Senators, were offered as a part of the report by the chairman of the committee, were considered by the committee, and placed in the report and placed in the House bill.

Mr. CLAY. The reason of my objection to the amendments was simply because I thought the bill had been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and had been considered by that committee and reported to the Senate. I was not aware of the fact that it was a House bill being considered without having gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. I say it has been considered by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and all the amendments, except some of the later ones, which are being offered by Senators individually, were considered by the Senate committee and were reported by the chairman.

Mr. CLAY. Then I am correct. The amendments offered on the floor which we have adopted have not been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. Some of them have not been considered since the bill came from the House. Many of them are bills; some are even matters that have passed the Senate at this session in the shape of bills.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Indian Affairs did not, in making its report, insert these amendments in the bill?

Mr. CLAPP. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. In the shape of a bill it has been passed upon by the Indian Committee of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and adjudicate any and all claims in law or equity of the Kaw tribe of Indians residing in Oklahoma against the United States relating to lands under any of the treaties between the United States and said tribe; that suit under this act shall be filed in said court within six months from the date of the approval hereof, and no compromise or settlement heretofore made by the United States with the said Kaw tribe of Indians or with individual members thereof shall be pleaded in satisfaction of any such claim or claims or in estoppel thereof; but such amount as may have been paid, if any, in compromise or settlement of any claim or claims sued for hereunder may be pleaded as a set-off in any such suit or suits; and in hearing said suit or suits the Court of Claims shall exercise equitable as well as legal jurisdiction and apply to the transaction between the United States and said Indians the rules of equity applicable to the relations of guardian and ward and of trustee and cestui que trust.

The suit or suits herein authorized shall be brought by attorney or attorneys employed by the legal representative of Henry C. Dooley, deceased, in accordance with the terms of a contract entered into between the said Henry C. Dooley and the Kaw tribe of Indians, dated April 26, 1898, approved by the Secretary of the Interior February 7, 1899, and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs February 10, 1899; and the term of said contract is extended until the final conclusion and settlement of all matters growing out of the suit or suits herein authorized.

If the court shall ascertain and adjudge that the Kaw tribe of Indians have been deprived by the United States of any lands to which said tribe were or are justly entitled, the court shall enter judgment in favor of said tribe against the United States for an amount equal to $1.25 per acre for the land so found by them to be due said tribe, less the amount of the fee due the attorneys of said tribe, in said suit or suits as herein provided.

And said court shall enter a separate judgment in favor of the attorney or attorneys for the said tribe in said suit or suits for 10 per cent of the amount of the recovery, which shall be paid direct to said attorney or attorneys, and the sum necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Is it proposed to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. OWEN. It simply authorizes suit. It has been reported by the Indian Committee.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand the money will come out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. OWEN. If there is a recovery, of course that would be the consequence.

Mr. KEAN. I thought this was to be paid out of funds that belong to the Indian tribe.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; if the court finds anything is due at all, it will be paid by the United States and not by the Kaw Indians.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know just what the amount is. They made a settlement with the United States some time ago for, I believe, $100,000.

Mr. KEAN. This is setting aside—

Mr. OWEN. This is intended to give them a rehearing on it.

Mr. KEAN. Setting aside the entire settlement?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. Leaving everything open?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. And allowing the whole claim to be opened as if not settlement had ever been made?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it makes a perfectly indefinite charge on the Treasury, and no such indefinite charge on the Treasury ought to be permitted.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question at all but what this amendment ought to pass Congress as a law. The only question that would be involved here is that we have sought so far to keep matters off of this bill that involved, in a sense, appropriations. In view of the fact that the House put no such provisions on, while I should heartily support this bill and have gone over it in committee, and believe it should be passed as a law, I rather think it ought not to go onto this bill.

Mr. NELSON. I want to suggest to the Senator that if this amendment is put on it will make it subject to a point of order that may defeat the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. That is the point exactly. I feel constrained to suggest that it should not go on the bill for that reason.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 34. That all persons who made entry or settlement on vacant lands belonging to the United States Government in Oklahoma on or before October 6, 1901, shall be entitled to an extension of time for final payment thereon from October 6, 1908, until February 15, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 35. That hereafter no commission, counsel, or attorney's fee shall be paid on any Indian claim adjudicated by the Court of Claims until the same shall have been by said court approved as reasonable and just, and in no case shall a fee be allowed in excess of the amount provided by the contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Kaw amendment was rejected, and that it be left without prejudice. I should like to withdraw the amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS FROM INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. OWEN submitted the following report:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed as a denial of the right of the United States to take such steps as may be necessary, including the bringing of any suit and the prosecution and appeal thereof, to acquire or retain possession of restricted Indian lands, or to remove cloud therefrom, or clear title to the same, in cases where deeds, leases, or contracts of any other kind or character whatsoever have been or shall be made contrary to law with respect to such lands prior to the removal therefrom of restrictions upon the alienation thereof; such suits to be brought on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, without costs or charges to the allottees, the necessary expenses incurred in so doing to be defrayed from the money appropriated by this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add: "Provided further, That if any member of the Five Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood shall die leaving issue surviving, born since March fourth, nineteen hundred and six, the homestead of such deceased allottee shall remain inalienable, unless restrictions against alienation are removed therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in section one hereof, for the use and support of such issue, during their life or lives, until April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and thirty-one; but if no such issue survive, then such allottee, if an adult, may dispose of his homestead by will free from all restrictions; if this be not done, or in the event the issue hereinbefore provided for die before April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and thirty-one, the land shall then descend to the heirs, according to the laws of descent and distribution of the State of Oklahoma, free from all restrictions: Provided further, That the provisions of section twenty-three of the act of April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and six, as amended by this act, are hereby made applicable to all wills executed under this section;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations, respectively, any and all outstanding general and school warrants duly signed by the auditor of public accounts of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and drawn on the national treasurers thereof prior to January first, nineteen hundred and seven, with six per cent interest per annum from the respective dates of said warrants: Provided, That said warrants be presented to the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, Muskogee, Okla., within sixty days from the passage of this act, together with the affidavits of the respective holders of said warrants that they purchased the same in good faith for a valuable consideration, and had no reason to suspect fraud in the issuance of said warrants: Provided further, That such warrants remaining in the hands of the original payee shall be paid by said Secretary when it is shown that the services for which said warrants were issued were actually performed by said payee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

DESECRATION OF THE FLAG.

MR. LODGE. I desire to call up the bill (S. 565) to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag of the United States of America. The bill was taken up during my absence. There is no objection to it, I believe, from anyone. I think the bill was read and the amendment adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read.

Mr. LODGE. Some question was raised whether the bill would not exclude organizations like the Grand Army from carrying banners with inscriptions. I do not myself think it would cover anything of that sort at all or reach them in any way, but I have talked the matter over with the Senator from Georgia, and I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided further, This act shall not apply to banners or flags carried by military or patriotic organizations authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to call up the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I consented to the reading of the bill upon conference with the Senator in charge of it, intending to object to its consideration when the reading had been completed, in order that I may have an opportunity to examine the bill. I therefore hope the amendments will not be acted upon at this time. I ask that the bill go over. It is a very important measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that the bill go over.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would be glad if the Senator from Georgia would examine the bill, as I should like to call it up to-morrow, if by that time the Senator shall have had time to look it over.

Mr. BACON. I will try to look over it. I do not know how that may be.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and a similar measure from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. BACON. I will look at it, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7184) for the relief of citizens of the United States and the Philippine Islands, to report it favorably without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the bill is a very short one, and it is important that it should be passed to-day. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. From what committee does the bill come, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARREN. I may say to the Senator from Texas that these are claims for damages on account of live stock or poultry killed, or growing crops or other property destroyed by the Army where the maneuvers were held in the past few years in the United States, and I think perhaps there is one or more claims from the Philippines. They have all been passed upon by a board of survey, and have been certified to Congress by the War Department in the regular estimates for the year's appropriations.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay for settlement of twenty-five approved claims for damages to and loss of private property belonging to citizens of the United States and of the Philippine Islands, $4,705.45.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINEDOKA RECLAMATION PROJECT.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6018) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in connection with town sites established within or in the vicinity of the Minedoka reclamation project in Idaho under the provisions of the act of April 16, 1906, and June 27, 1906, in fixing the terms of sale for lots to provide, in his discretion, for payments in cash or in not exceeding ten annual installments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum on deferred payments. He is further authorized to expend from the proceeds of the sales of town lots in any town site heretofore or hereafter established under said act on said project such sums as in his discretion may be necessary for the construction of schoolhouses, water and sewer systems, and other municipal improvements, and for the operation and maintenance thereof, the expenditures herein provided for to be made through the Reclamation Service. The installments paid on the purchase of lots shall be available for such purposes to their entire extent as received.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to reserve from entry under the public-land laws such lands as may be necessary for cemetery purposes, either adjacent to such town sites or at locations convenient for the purpose. He is further authorized to make appropriate regulations for the subdivision and sale of lots in said cemeteries at an appraised value through the Reclamation Service. The proceeds of such sales by the Reclamation Service shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be available for cemetery and general municipal improvements, subject to the provisions of section 1 hereof.

SEC. 3. That the survey, subdivision, and sale of lots for cemeteries and town sites heretofore and hereafter established under said act shall be conducted by the Secretary of the Interior through the Reclamation Service. The proceeds of such sales shall be turned over to the receiver of the local land office, and patents for the lots shall be issued in the usual manner through the General Land Office.

Mr. MONEY. I shall have to object to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

LYDIA P. WINT.

Mr. CURTIS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1508) granting an increase of pension to Lydia P. Wint, to report it favorably with an amendment. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania to the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 7, after the word "brigadier-general," to insert "United States Army," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lydia P. Wint, widow of Theodore J. Wint, late brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 21, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 1908.

[Continuation of the 16th s<sup>es</sup>sion of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES MADE BY GEORGE L. LILLEY.

MR. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report of the select committee appointed under the provisions of House resolution 288. It is the unanimous report of the committee, and I ask that the same be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. LILLEY'S MOTIVE IN INTRODUCING HIS RESOLUTION.

The avowed motive for this investigation, assigned at the outset, was the purification of this House and the exposure of the alleged corrupt practices of a corporation enjoying and still seeking Government contracts. This motive was expressed before the Committee on Rules in these words of Mr. LILLEY: "This Electric Boat Company has been a stench in the nostrils of the country for years, and, in my opinion, it has done more to corrupt legislation than all the other corporations on earth. I think the membership of this House is of the very highest quality, and that they are the best men, usually, from the districts from which they come; but with a flock of 383 here, it would be strange if there were not some sheep in it that had the foot-rot or scab." The evidence has demonstrated that the avowed motive was neither well grounded nor sincere, and that certain secondary and ulterior purposes instigated and encouraged the introduction of the resolution.

The investigation was rendered imperative through charges made by Mr. GEORGE L. LILLEY, a Representative from the State of Connecticut, in connection with a resolution introduced by him in the House on February 20, 1908.

Toward the close of the hearings before this committee Mr. LILLEY testified that if the naval appropriation bill of this session as agreed on in committee had contained a provision that met with his approval for the purchase of submarines, he would not have introduced his resolution. The evidence further shows that before introducing his resolution, but after the naval bill had been agreed on in committee, but not reported, he told Mr. JAMES S. SHERMAN, a Representative from the State of New York, that if the naval bill could be so amended that the clause relating to the purchase of submarines should provide for his conception of open competition, he would not offer the resolution. This contrast between the motive announced by Mr. LILLEY in his first appearance before the Committee on Rules and the purpose disclosed by his course during the investigation and by his final evidence before this committee must be borne constantly in mind by one who tries to understand Mr. LILLEY's attitude toward the House and interpret correctly the voluminous evidence taken by this committee.

STATUS OF THE SUBMARINE BOAT CONTROVERSY WHEN MR. LILLEY INTRODUCED HIS RESOLUTION.

A brief review of the history of the main features of the submarine boat legislation that preceded the introduction of Mr. LILLEY's resolution will pave the way for an intelligent analysis of the remainder of the evidence.

For the past fifteen years the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and the Electric Boat Company (formerly the Holland Torpedo Boat Company) have been active rivals. Both corporations were chartered in New Jersey, but the main office of the Lake Company is in Bridgeport, Conn., while the Electric Company's principal office is in New York City. They are competitors for the sale of submarine torpedo boats to the United States and foreign governments. Each company controls a large number of patents, and the boats of the two companies, constructed under their respective patents, differ fundamentally from each other.

In their efforts to present to Congress and the Navy Department the merits of their boats, these companies have maintained offices and employed experienced lawyers and skillful agents in Washington. The Lake Company is now represented by Ex-Senator John M. Thurston, who was formerly counsel for the Electric Company. Abner R. Neff, and F. B. Whitney, who was at one time clerk of the House Committee on Naval Affairs; while the Electric Boat Company is represented by Ex-Senator Marion Butler and Mr. C. S. McNeil. Mr. John C. Lake, vice-president of the Lake Company, was until recently in charge of the company's office in Washington, while Mr. E. B. Frost, vice-president and general counsel of the Electric Boat Company, spends much of his time here in the interest of his company.

Each of these companies has sold its boats, or the right to construct its boats, to several governments. The rivalry between these two companies has not been simply a business rivalry between two manufacturing corporations. It has been a rivalry between jealous inventors, keen financiers, accomplished promoters of international fame, shrewd political agents, and resourceful lawyers. This rivalry has involved these companies in frequent lawsuits and in a bitter warfare, that has been carried on through the press on both sides of the ocean. A submarine boat is not a new invention. One was designed, constructed, and successfully navigated previous to the invention of the steam engine, and used in New York Harbor in 1776 in an attempt to destroy a British ship anchored off Governors Island. In 1801 Fulton invented a submarine boat and gave exhibitions at Paris, which were successful in diving and remaining under water, but failed to operate against the British ships.

During the civil war a submarine boat was constructed at the Washington Navy-Yard for the purpose of destroying the Merrimac, which was propelled by hand power, as were all other submarine boats up to that time. It was not until the invention of the storage battery that any great improvement could be made in the operation of submarine boats. Testimony of Admiral Bradford before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, 1901, page 67.)

The submarine boat of the diving type as now constructed had its origin in the inventions and experiments of Capt. John P. Holland on the Passaic River, New Jersey, in 1877, which were continued in New York Harbor from 1881 to 1883. In 1888 for the first time the United States Government gave consideration to this means of naval defense, when Secretary of the Navy Whitney allotted out of the appropriation for harbor and coast defenses a sum to be expended for experiments in submarines. Competition was invited, in which participated Capt. John P. Holland and Mr. Nordenfellt, a constructor of submarine boats resembling the even-keel type. The Holland boat won, but no contract was awarded.

In 1889 Secretary of the Navy Tracy again advertised for competition in the construction of submarines, and in the test there participated Messrs. Holland, Nordenfellt, and Baker, of Iowa. Mr. Holland again won, but no contract was awarded as the result of this test, since the funds were needed elsewhere (page 175).

In 1893 bids for submarines were submitted to the United States Government by four inventors. Two of those competitors were Mr. J. P. Holland, inventor of the Holland torpedo boat, and Mr. Simon Lake, founder of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. No submarine boat had then been built in the United States, and the decision of the Navy Department upon which the first contract was made was based on plans and specifications. The Holland type of boat was approved by the Navy Department, and in March, 1895, a contract was signed with the Holland Torpedo Boat Company for the construction of one boat. During the next seven years contracts were awarded to this company for seven additional boats. By 1903 the Lake company had completed the construction of a boat, and the two companies requested the Navy Department to test the merits of their respective boats by actual water competition.

The Holland boat met the rigid requirements which were prescribed by the Government, but the Lake boat was withdrawn from the contest. Contracts for four more boats were awarded to the Electric Boat Company in 1905.

The naval appropriation act of June 29, 1906, authorized the Secretary of the Navy to contract for or purchase additional submarine torpedo boats to an amount not exceeding $1,000,000, after such tests as he might see fit to prescribe to determine the comparative efficiency of the different boats for which bids might be submitted, provided that such tests should take place within nine months from the date of the passage of the act.

The naval appropriation act of March 2, 1907, increased the amount for submarines to $3,000,000, extended the test period to May 20, 1907, and contained this proviso: "No part of this appropriation to be expended for any boat that does not in such test prove to be equal, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, to the best boat now owned by the United States or under contract therefor, and no penalties under this limitation shall be imposed by reason of any delay in the delivery of said boat due to the submission or participation in the comparative trials aforesaid."

Under this legislation the trials came off at Newport during the month of May of last year. The Lake Company entered their boat, called the Lake, and the Octopus was submitted by the Electric Company. The tests were exhaustive and lasted through four weeks. The trial board, composed of Capt. Adolph Marx, Naval Constructor D. W. Taylor, Commander D. W. Walling, Lieut. Commander W. Strothers Smith, and Lieut. J. W. Timmons, reported unanimously in favor of the Octopus type of boat. This report is dated May 30, 1907 (page 308).

This report was unanimously approved on the 23d day of June, 1907, by the board on construction, composed of Rear-Admiral George A. Converse, Admiral C. W. Rae, Admiral W. L. Capps, Admiral N. E. Mason, and Admiral W. S. Cowles.

The Secretary of the Navy and the law officer of the Navy Department considered that the Secretary was bound, under the act of March 2, 1907, to award a contract for the entire amount of the appropriation to the Electric Boat Company. He was, however, induced to refer to the Attorney-General the question as to his right to make a contract with a company other than the one that had been successful in the tests. The attorneys of the two companies filed briefs with the Attorney-General, and he rendered a decision in favor of the contention of the Lake Company.

On February 3, 1908, a contract was made with the Lake Company for the construction of one boat, contracts having previously been made with the Electric Company for seven boats.

On the 5th day of February, Representative SPERRY, of Connecticut, introduced in the House a bill for the appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of submarine torpedo boats, the contracts to be awarded to the lowest bidders upon "guaranteed performances equal to the published requirements of the Secretary of the Navy."

THE ITEM FOR SUBMARINE BOATS IN THIS YEAR'S NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On February 10 the House Committee on Naval Affairs agreed upon the appropriation bill for this year. The clause relating to submarines was in these words:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase one destroyer or torpedo boat of the type known as "subsurface," "semisubmerged" (or the like), the essential feature of which is to have during its operation some portion of the hull or superstructure always on or above the surface, such vessel to cost not to exceed $400,000, and to have a speed not less than 22 knots; also for two small vessels of like type having a speed of not less than 16 knots and to cost not to exceed $22,500 each: Provided, That before any vessel of the type provided for in this paragraph shall be purchased or contracted for a vessel of such type shall have been constructed complete and of full size for naval warfare and submitted to the Navy Department for such trial and tests as the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, prescribe, and as the result of such tests, be demonstrated to have fulfilled all the reasonable requirements of naval warfare for a vessel of its class, and for these vessels the sum of $445,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until expended."

The report of the Secretary of the Navy for the year 1907 (p. 268) contained the following recommendation:
 "Four submarines (of the same type as those recommended as a result of the recent competitive tests), provided a more satisfactory type is not developed in the meantime."

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS ON THE ACTION OF THE NAVAL COMMITTEE.

Soon after this action by the Committee on Naval Affairs a series of articles appeared in a New York paper, in which it was suggested that the Electric Boat Company had succeeded in defeating the battle-ship proposition and in securing thereby exclusive legislation for its own benefit. In one of these articles, published on the 15th of February, appeared for the first time the claim that, according to the testimony of Admiral Bowles in 1902, $745.45 a ton was a reasonable price for submarine boats, and that on this basis the Electric Boat Company would reap an excess profit of $1,476,296.60.

MR. LILLEY'S RESOLUTION.

Such in general was the situation as it was known to the public with regard to legislation respecting submarines, when, late in the afternoon of Thursday, February 20, 1908, Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution by having his clerk give it to a page to drop in the basket on the Clerk's desk. What Mr. LILLEY knew that the public did not know, what other measures had been taken, and what schemes had been laid by the two companies, or either of them, to further their own ends will become apparent from a further analysis of the testimony.

A critical examination must now be made of the full text of Mr. LILLEY's resolution.

"Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the conduct of the Electric Boat Company, of New Jersey, and their predecessors, the Holland Boat Company, respecting the methods employed by said companies in connection with past and proposed legislation before Congress: Provided, That said committee shall have the power to send for persons and papers, to examine witnesses under oath, and may employ a stenographer and one clerk, and shall report the result of its investigations to the House with such recommendations as it may deem proper: Provided further, The expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers approved by the chairman."

The resolution was indorsed by Mr. LILLEY to be referred to the Committee on Rules. It will be observed that the resolution makes no reference to Members of Congress or to any one but the Electric Boat Company. It does not charge the company with corruption or misconduct. It asks for an investigation of the conduct of the company respecting the methods employed by it in connection with past or proposed legislation, but it does not even suggest the nature of the legislation the author had in mind or what conduct or methods are to be examined. It was therefore not a privileged resolution under the rules of the House, and could not be called up by its author in case the committee to which it was referred did not report it. On its face the resolution disclosed no grounds for its report or even consideration by a committee.

Shortly after the introduction of the resolution the attention of the Committee on Rules was called to a number of newspaper articles purporting to give interviews with Mr. LILLEY, in which he charged the Electric Boat Company with bribery and corruption and coupled Members of the House with these charges, and mentioned several Members by name.

On February 25 Mr. LILLEY appeared before the Committee on Rules and was questioned, but not under oath, respecting the charges contained in these interviews. He repudiated all the interviews but one, denying every statement that had been attributed to him respecting Members of the House whom he was alleged to have mentioned by name. He admitted the authenticity and acknowledged the accuracy of an article that appeared in the Washington Post of February 21. He also read to the committee a statement on his responsibility as a Member.

The grounds on which the Committee on Rules reported its resolution directing an investigation are to be found in the charges of Mr. LILLEY, which are contained first in his statement before the Committee on Rules; second, in his responses to the inquiries by members of that committee, and third, in the Washington Post article. His whole "case," as he called it, against Members of the House, the officials of the Navy Department, the representatives of the press, and the Electric Boat Company and its officers is embraced in the report of the Committee on Rules, which is printed in full on pages 1 to 13 of the published hearings of this committee.

MR. LILLEY'S CHARGES.

Mr. LILLEY's charges were—

First. That the proposition to appropriate for four battle ships was defeated through the influence upon members of the committee of the Electric Boat Company, and that thereby an appropriation for eight submarines was secured.

Second. That the Electric Boat Company has maintained in Washington an organized lobby for influencing appropriations in favor of that company.

Third. That Mr. E. B. Frost, an officer of the company, has spent large sums of money in furnishing entertainment for Members of Congress.

Fourth. That the Senate amendment to the naval appropriation act of March 2, 1907, was prepared by an attorney of the Electric Boat Company and was designed to limit the appropriation exclusively for the benefit of that company.

Fifth. That the Electric Boat Company has contributed to the campaign fund of the Members of Congress who favored the Electric Boat Company's monopoly of submarine construction.

Sixth. That the Electric Boat Company has spent large sums of money to defeat members of the Naval Committee who did not favor the Electric Boat Company.

Seventh. That the Electric Boat Company has attempted to influence officials of the Navy Department in its behalf.

Eighth. That the efforts of the Electric Boat Company have resulted in suppressing all possibility of competition in submarine construction.

Ninth. That the company has been engaged in "doubtful and reprehensible efforts to influence Members of Congress and officials of the Navy Department in favor of their boats and appropriations therefor."

Tenth. That the Electric Boat Company has subsidized members of the press in its interest.

Eleventh. That the Electric Boat Company is "using wrongful methods in most every Member's district who serves on the Naval Committee."

Twelfth. That these corrupt practices "apply to Members of the present Congress touching business before the present Congress."

Thirteenth. That attorneys have been retained by the Electric Boat Company in many Congressional districts solely for the purpose of influencing the Representative from that district in favor of the Electric Boat Company's interest.

Fourteenth. That in some districts attorneys have been induced by the Electric Boat Company to become candidates for Congress against Members who have opposed the company's interests.

Fifteenth. That "this Electric Boat Company has been a stench in the nostrils of the country for years, and in my opinion it has done more to corrupt legislation than all the other corporations on earth."

Sixteenth. That "with a flock of 383 here [in the House of Representatives] it would be strange if there were not some sheep in it that had the foot rot or scabies. I think the disease ought to be eradicated before it spreads."

COMMITTEE ON RULES REPORTS RESOLUTION FOR INVESTIGATION.

Such grave charges made by Mr. LILLEY, on his responsibility as a Member of the House, could not be ignored, and on March 6, the Committee on Rules reported House Resolution 288, which was on the same day unanimously adopted, as follows:

Whereas Mr. GEORGE L. LILLEY, a Representative from the State of Connecticut, on his responsibility as a Member of this House, before the Committee on Rules, has, among other things, stated in substance that the Electric Boat Company, of New Jersey, and their predecessors, the Holland Boat Company, have been engaged in efforts to exert corrupting influence on certain Members of Congress in their legislative capacities, and have, in fact, exerted such corrupting influence; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That a committee of five Members be appointed to investigate the charges made by said GEORGE L. LILLEY of corrupt practices on the part of said company and of Members of Congress with respect to legislation, and that said committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers and to take testimony in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, either before the full committee or any subcommittee thereof. Said committee shall report as speedily as possible with such recommendation, if any, as to the committee shall seem meet."

Immediately upon the adoption of the resolution this committee was appointed.

MR. LILLEY'S STRANGE ATTITUDE TOWARD THE INVESTIGATION.

On Saturday, March 7, the committee organized, and requested Mr. LILLEY to attend a meeting on the following Monday and give the committee all the evidence in his possession. In view of the serious character of his charges and insinuations against his fellow-Members, he was asked in honor so soon as this committee was appointed to make it the recipient of every fact in his possession on which his accusations and suspicions were founded, especially as he had asserted before the Committee on Rules that he was "not talking on hearsay."

Instead of adopting this natural course, he wrote to the committee on the 7th, asking to be advised of the first meeting, so that he might appear and arrange with the committee "as to the time, manner, and procedure of beginning and conducting the investigation."

MR. LILLEY REFUSES TO TESTIFY WITHOUT THE AID AND ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

When the committee met on March 9, and Mr. LILLEY was asked to give his evidence, he declined to testify, but read to the committee a statement respecting the importance of having unwilling witnesses examined by some one skilled in the art of cross-examination. He then requested that he be allowed to be represented before the committee by counsel, who should be empowered to examine such witnesses as he should call.

He then informed the committee that he was being shadowed by detectives, who were hampering him in connection with this investigation.

When he read the names of witnesses whom he wished to have summoned, several of them were by subpoena duces tecum. He was assured that all his requests would be considered by the committee, and was again asked to give the committee such facts as he had in his possession. He declined to testify until he could consult with counsel, or to proceed with any statement except by the advice of counsel. He was told that he could, of course, appear with counsel, and consult with counsel at all times, even while testifying, but that he hardly needed counsel to examine himself. He declined, however, to give the committee any facts upon which they could proceed, and the committee was compelled to adjourn until the 12th.

MR. LILLEY'S EXPECTATION THAT HE WOULD BE CHAIRMAN AND HAVE CHARGE OF THE INVESTIGATION EXPLAINS IN PART HIS ATTITUDE.

Mr. LILLEY's singular attitude toward the investigation which his charges had instituted, his somewhat incoherent and irrelevant statements to the committee, and his unwillingness to give to the committee those facts on which his charges were based and which they thought he ought to be quick to impart, puzzled the committee more at the time than they would have done had the committee known what the evidence subsequently disclosed, that Mr. LILLEY expected, when he introduced his resolution, to be made chairman of the investigating committee (pp. 1514, 1515), with power to employ counsel and conduct the proceedings, and thus be relieved of the necessity of either disavowing or making good his charges against his colleagues. The appointment of this committee, however, relieved Mr. LILLEY of all responsibility for the conduct of the investigation, and simply left to him the duty of communicating to the committee the information on which he based the charges made by him on his responsibility as a Member of the House.

This committee has always had power to employ counsel for cross-examining witnesses, and for all other purposes; but the committee have never felt the necessity of calling in such assistance. Mr. LILLEY had no right to determine what counsel should aid in conducting this investigation. That was for the committee to decide. Therefore, in denying his request that counsel employed by him should examine under his direction witnesses called by him before the committee this committee did not deprive Mr. LILLEY of any right or privilege to which he was entitled. On the other hand, his request that he should be allowed to dictate the selection of counsel and the procedure of the committee, thereby substituting himself for the committee, was not only extraordinary, but unprecedented. Much more reasonable would have been a request from his colleagues, whom he had placed under suspicion that they should be allowed to employ counsel to examine and cross-examine witnesses for the purpose of clearing their names from the accusations that had been made against them.

So, when the committee met on March 12, this resolution, which had been adopted in executive session, was read for the information and guidance of Mr. LILLEY and all other persons interested.

"Resolved, That Hon. GEORGE L. LILLEY, the Electric Boat Company, and such other parties affected by the investigation as may desire to do so, may be accompanied by and consult with counsel in all public hearings of the committee; and that in view of these circumstances and in accordance with the well-established precedents of both Houses of Congress for insuring the orderly conduct of such investigation, the examination of all witnesses called and conducted by a member of the committee to be designated for that purpose from time to time by the chairman; and that such questions or course of examination as parties interested, or their counsel, may desire shall be submitted in writing to the committee."

In accordance with the rule of procedure laid down in this resolution the work of the committee proceeded in an orderly, dignified, and expeditious manner, and the committee feel that no party in interest was deprived of any right or privilege, and that no essential facts were withheld from the committee that could have been elicited by any other method of procedure. All witnesses named by Mr. LILLEY were summoned, all lines of inquiry suggested by Mr. LILLEY were followed out, and all pertinent questions submitted by him were rigidly pressed upon the witnesses. The number of written questions submitted by him to certain witnesses exceeded 200. At no time did the committee feel the need of counsel to develop the exhaustive line of inquiry embraced in and suggested by Mr. LILLEY's interrogatories.

MR. LILLEY APPEARS BY COUNSEL AND READS ANOTHER STATEMENT.

At this hearing Mr. LILLEY appeared accompanied by his personal counsel, Mr. Frank P. Brown, of Norwich, Conn., and Hon. Styles Judson, of Bridgeport, Conn. The committee had previously written to Mr. LILLEY, assuring him that if detectives were hampering him in the discharge of his official duties every effort would be made to stop the annoyance. Mr. LILLEY informed the committee that the annoyance had ceased.

It may be stated here that at a later stage of the hearings it developed that the men whom Mr. LILLEY's suspicions had transformed into detectives hired to watch his office were raw recruits of the new police force of the Office Building, who were forced, while waiting for their uniforms, to patrol the corridors in plain clothes.

CHARGES AGAINST MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE.

In the statement which Mr. LILLEY read in this hearing he insisted that he had made no charges against Members of the House. He said: "I should again call attention to the fact that I have made no charges against the membership of the House, but only against the improper methods pursued by the Electric Boat Company and its predecessors to influence Members of the House; and notwithstanding which the Committee on Rules of its own motion prepared and reported a resolution under which this committee is proceeding, which reads as follows:

"Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed to investigate the charges made by said Mr. GEORGE L. LILLEY of corrupt practices on the part of said company and of Members of Congress with respect to legislation."

"The first statement of this resolution that I have made charges of corrupt practices on the part of said companies is correct. The further statement that I have made charges of corrupt practices on the part of Members of Congress is not correct, and is at variance with the tenor of my original resolution and of my statement made before the Committee on Rules."

It was impossible for this committee to reconcile this statement with the specific charges made by Mr. LILLEY before the Committee on Rules. If, before this committee he had withdrawn his charges against Members of this Congress and had given a satisfactory explanation of how he had been misled into making them, this committee might have felt justified in closing the investigation with such withdrawal. But this distinct disagreement between what he said before the Committee on Rules on the 25th of February, and what he said to this committee, compelled a most thorough investigation, not only as to the grounds, if any, on which his original charges were made, but the motives which induced Mr. LILLEY to make them and then withdraw them so far as they were related to Members of the House.

MR. LILLEY'S UNWILLINGNESS TO COOPERATE WITH THE COMMITTEE.

This statement of Mr. LILLEY contains many expressions showing that he was extremely reluctant to testify before the committee, and his unwillingness to cooperate with the committee. He says:

"The permission that I might be accompanied by and consult counsel in all public hearings of the committee, and that I may, through myself or counsel, submit any questions in writing would be of no possible benefit to me or of assistance to the committee in securing the real facts."

Again he says:

"The Committee on Rules, in its resolution, under which this committee is acting, has said to the country that you are to investigate the charges made by me. However inaccurate this statement may be, it is nevertheless the official statement of the resolution under which this committee is appointed; and it would seem reasonable that if the responsibility is thus placed upon me to make good these charges, that I be permitted assistance by counsel competent to conduct the investigation, to call for witnesses and documentary evidences, and to proceed in the presentation of testimony in such manner and along such lines as I am advised and believe is proper and necessary to secure from the witnesses the real facts, which I believe when presented will sustain any charge I have made."

"I had supposed that it was the function of this committee to sit here as judges and not to act as prosecutors or defenders, and therefore that the orderly and effective procedure would be to have witnesses examined in the first instance by some other than a member of this judicial tribunal."

The committee was unable to tell what thoughts were in Mr. LILLEY's mind when he insinuated that this committee was acting either as a prosecutor or a defender of anyone when at its second session they were simply trying, as they were at their first meeting, to persuade him to present to the committee the facts in his possession. Such an insinuation calls for no comment from this committee. Coming from a Member of the House, the making of it carries its own rebuke.

Again he says: "Mr. Chairman, I ask your honorable committee as to whether or not after consideration of what I have just stated the committee still adheres to its determination to prohibit me from calling the witnesses and presenting their testimony under examination of my attorneys."

MR. LILLEY'S LACK OF CANDOR TOWARD THE HOUSE.

No one of the three statements made by Mr. LILLEY—one before the Committee on Rules and two before this committee—was made under oath. Attention has been called to the peculiar wording of his resolution, which contains no charges against Members and no charges of corruption against anyone. His charges were made in his statement and responses before the Committee on Rules and in the Washington Post article, which was made part of his case. This method of making his charges is very significant in view of his disclaimer of those charges when called upon to testify before this committee. It is a grave and solemn responsibility which a Member of the House of Representatives assumes in making public charges, accusations, or insinuations affecting directly or indirectly, the honor, integrity, or good name of his fellow-Members. In the opinion of this committee a Member who feels called upon to make such charges, accusations, or insinuations should embody them formally in his resolution of inquiry, or should state them openly upon the floor of the House upon his responsibility as a Member.

COUNSEL FOR THE LAKE TORPEDO BOAT COMPANY PREPARED ALL THE STATEMENTS OF MR. LILLEY.

After this investigation had been in progress for some weeks it was disclosed, through the admission of Ex-Senator Thurston himself, the counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, that he prepared the statement which Mr. LILLEY read on his responsibility as a Member before the Committee on Rules, the statement read before this committee on the 9th of March, and, in part, the statement read before this committee on the 12th of March, in the preparation of which Messrs. Brown and Judson also participated.

Not only were these statements which Mr. LILLEY read as his own and on his responsibility as a Member prepared by the attorney of the Lake Company, but the entire series of questions to be propounded to witnesses by way of cross-examination that were addressed to the committee and signed by Mr. LILLEY were prepared either by Senator Thurston or by Neff and Whitney. The subpoena duces tecum which the committee sent to Mr. LILLEY, so that he could fill them out and call for whatever books and papers he intended to lay the foundation for, were filled out by the Lake Company's counsel. And, finally, the names of witnesses had to be furnished Mr. LILLEY by officers of the Lake Company, and the numerous letters and statements sent to the committee by Mr. LILLEY, and signed by him, and compilations of statistics and newspaper clippings and several affidavits laid before the committee by Mr. LILLEY, were all prepared by officers or agents of the Lake Company. These facts were not disclosed to the committee by Mr. LILLEY, and only became apparent from the evidence of other witnesses after the hearings had been in progress for a month. It will be seen that Mr. LILLEY was never embarrassed by lack of counsel, but that, on the contrary, he enjoyed from the outset, without cost to himself, the advice and assistance of a learned and experienced lawyer and skilled parliamentarian, who was familiar with the entire history of the submarine controversy.

Mr. LILLEY's intense desire to conceal from your committee his indebtedness to the officers and agents of the Lake Company for all his information and his most valuable advice and assistance led him throughout his testimony, and especially in the earlier part of these hearings, to testify in many instances with an inaccuracy that can not be explained in any manner creditable to him. During the first days of the examination, and on the 12th of March, he was asked (pages 52-53):

"Q. You have mentioned, I think, one or two attorneys in Washington as representing you, said, the Lake Company. Upon that subject you speak, I understood, of your own knowledge?—A. Yes, sir."

"Q. Have they approached you, or attempted to influence you?—A. Never."

"Q. Or have you consulted with them?—A. Never."

"I mean with reference to anything pending before the Naval Committee or this committee?—A. No; not until after the introduction of my resolution."

"Q. What then?—A. I have talked on two or three occasions since that with Senator Thurston."

"Q. With reference to this investigation?—A. Such information as I could gain from him, that he was willing to give me."

"Q. Did he prepare or assist in preparing any of the statements you submitted to us?—A. The subject-matter of all the statements I have submitted to you has been my own. Mostly formulated in my own mind, after consulting with two eminent Members of the House of Representatives."

"Q. Did you consult with Senator Thurston about the form of them or anything about them?—A. No; not as to the form of them."

A month later it was disclosed through the testimony of Senator Thurston and Neff that, as we have stated, Senator Thurston prepared the form of two of Mr. LILLEY's statements. At the very time Mr. LILLEY was trying to give to your committee the impression that the statements were his own, and made on his own responsibility, and that no one else was responsible even for their form, he was holding in his hand a statement dictated by the counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. When examined more specifically as to his sources of information, he said:

"Then I must decline to explain the preparation of my case."

"Q. On what grounds?"

"A. On the ground that it is not pertinent to this investigation. I will take the responsibility for what I have read."

More marked still was his effort at deception in speaking of Abner R. Neff, the agent of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company in Washington. When asked how he came to consult Senator Thurston, he said:

"My impression is that Mr. Neff, or Neeth, whichever it is, the young man who represents the Lake Company, came to me after I had introduced the resolution and asked me if I would like to have a consultation with Senator Thurston, not at my expense."

"Q. You say Mr. Neeth represented the Lake Boat Company?"

"A. I expect he does" (page 54).

Again (page 56), when Senator Thurston and Neff were referred to he said:

"I never saw any of these men until after my resolution was introduced, neither one of them, except that a young man some time back wanted me to suggest a motion in substitution of the Loudenslager motion to given open competition in submarines."

When he was asked for Neff's address, the question was "Can you give us the name of Mr. Neff? do you know how he spells his name?"

"A. It is either N-e-f-f or N-e-t-h. I don't know where he lives nor what his initials are" (page 64).

It subsequently developed through the testimony of Senator Thurston and Neff that Neff had been holding almost daily conferences with Mr. LILLEY, beginning with the night of the introduction of his resolution, and helping him in the preparation of his case. Furthermore, when Mr. LILLEY said that he had never seen or known him before the resolution was introduced it must have been difficult for him to forget that he had a conference with him on February 10, 1908, immediately after the action of the Naval Committee; that he went down in one of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company's boats with him in the previous summer; that in the same summer Neff spent a night at his hotel in Waterbury, dictated a telegram for him to send to the Secretary of the Navy in the interest of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and held a long conference with him in his office in the preparation of a letter to be sent by Mr. LILLEY to the Secretary of the Navy.

Equally suggestive of an intent to deceive was his testimony on March 12, 1908, relating to his acquaintance with Mr. Simon Lake and Mr. J. C. Lake. He was asked (page 57):

"Q. Did you have a letter from any other company?—A. No; no letter from any other company. If you mean by that if I heard from the Lake people or Simon Lake or any of those people—is that what you are driving at?"

"Q. Yes.—A. That is what you want to know; I have not seen or heard from any of them."

"Q. I didn't have them in mind, but I had these others.—A. I have had no communication, nor have seen any of the Lakes, father or son, J. C. or Simon."

And yet, notwithstanding these positive denials of having seen or heard from either of the Lakes, when Mr. Metcalf, Secretary of the Navy, produced the letters that he had received from Mr. LILLEY in the interest of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, it was found that one of them began:

"My constituent, Mr. J. C. Lake, writes me," etc. (page 1503), and when Mr. Simon Lake was on the stand, he testified, that immediately after the action of the Naval Committee on February 10, 1908, he held a conference with Mr. LILLEY at a hotel at New Haven, Conn. (pages 1061-1062), with reference to the action of the committee and Mr. LILLEY's attitude toward the bill. This interview must have been between the 13th and 18th of February, 1908, under circumstances that must have impressed themselves indelibly on Mr. LILLEY's mind, and yet in less than a month he swore to your committee that he had not seen him. These instances of unjustifiable inaccuracy in Mr. LILLEY's evidence are sufficient to show the effort which he made to conceal from your committee his lack of all information to sustain his charges against Members of Congress and the Electric Boat Company except such as he received from the officers of the rival corporation, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

THE INAUGURATION OF THE LAKE TORPEDO BOAT COMPANY'S PROPAGANDA TO DEFEAT THE SUBMARINE CLAUSE IN THE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Lake Torpedo Boat Company signed its $450,000 contract with the Government on February 3, 1908. The Government having to this extent shown its approval of the Lake type of boat, the Lake Company determined to exert every effort to secure in this year's bill an appropriation for submarines that would not favor the winner in last year's tests, but would make the appropriation subject to another competition or leave it exclusively to the Secretary of the Navy. To secure this result was the object of Mr. Simon Lake's conference with Mr. LILLEY at New Haven about February 14 (pages 1061-1062):

"I called on him and asked him if it was a fact that the Naval Committee had passed such an exclusive or made such an exclusive provision, and he admitted that it was. Well, I said, that being the case, if it passes the House and Senate, it seems to me that it would be very foolish for the Lake Boat Company to further continue efforts for recognition in the United States."

"Q. Had his resolution calling for an investigation been offered at that time or not?—A. Oh, no; no. The resolution, I think, followed quite a little time after that. I know that I felt rather disappointed at what I considered Mr. LILLEY's lukewarmness to one of his constituents, as we considered ourselves one of his constituents, and I immediately came down and made a provision to start a propaganda of my own to see if I could not educate the Members of Congress up to the point of recognizing the merits of the Lake type of boat."

Again, when asked whether he had any regret that this investigation had been started, Mr. Lake said (page 1104):

"Well, I don't recollect who I expressed it to I had a regret; I stated, I think, in this connection that we had decided on a propaganda by means of which we hoped to bring to the attention of Members of Congress the fact that all important governments had now finally adopted practically as a standard the type which I first submitted to this Government fifteen years ago, and that we had started that line to inform them of that fact. Of course, naturally, we wanted submarine legislation, but we wanted submarine legislation that would permit us to bid and with a chance of securing contracts, providing we were able to meet the Department requirements, which we knew we were."

Ex-Senator Thurston and Neff were active agents in the propaganda. Neff, having testified that he had called on Mr. LILLEY immediately after the action of the Naval Committee on February 10, 1908, being asked when he next met Mr. LILLEY, he replied (page 1201):

"A. Oh, I don't know when I next met him. I did not meet very many people after that. The thing was pretty dull. Senator Thurston and I got together and we prepared to fight that on the floor of the House, and we had the whole thing prepared, and we were to fight on the floor of the House for open competition on the broad lines that it was for the best interests of the United States Government to foster competition, and we were a competing company to bid for the business, and we felt confident that Congress would give us that opportunity, and my time after that was principally spent with Senator Thurston."

"Q. In what way were you going to make a fight on the floor of the House?—A. We were simply going to base it on the restrictive features of past legislation and ask that those would be removed."

"Q. I know, but you would not have had access to the floor of the House yourself.—A. We are going to ask whatever Representative would be interested in such a fight. We had not decided upon any particular Representative as yet whom we would have, but I had in mind two or three Members of Congress."

"Q. Whom did you finally determine upon to make the fight?—A. Mr. Hill. I think is the man that I had in mind. I think he was a Representative from the Bridgeport district."

"Q. A very good man.—A. And I thought we would ask him. Our remarks were not personal or directed against our competitors; they were simply on the broad principle of competition, and we intended to make a fight along those lines."

"Q. And you would have furnished the information for the argument?—A. The Senator and I discussed it together."

"Q. What part was Mr. LILLEY to take?—A. We had not given him any part. He had not been very favorable to us and we wanted somebody to fight."

"Q. You did not consider him much of a fighter?—A. We did not think he had fought very hard for us up to that time and it was tried material we wanted."

CHRONOLOGY.

A chronological narrative of the related events that preceded and followed the inauguration of this propaganda of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company to secure a modification of the submarine clause as agreed upon in the Naval Committee will show the part that Mr. LILLEY's resolution and this investigation played in the propaganda.

1906.—Mr. LILLEY goes on the Naval Committee in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress and votes for the committee item for submarines (pages 1357, 1551).

This vote Mr. Franklin Taylor, a lifelong personal and political friend of Mr. LILLEY's and a manufacturer who supplied materials used in the construction of submarines, thought was due largely to a request made of Mr. LILLEY by him, for when Mr. LILLEY returned to Connecticut he said to his friend, "I voted yes, Franklin, and your face was in front of me when I voted" (page 481).

1907.—Mr. LILLEY votes for the committee item for submarines (page 1357). The naval appropriation act of March 2, 1907, contains an appropriation for submarines and for a competitive test to be concluded by May 29, 1907.

Only the Lake Company and the Electric Company entered boats for the tests, which were held at Newport, R. I., and completed on the 29th of May.

May 29.—Water test completed at Newport.

May 30.—Unanimous report of the trial board, known as the "Marix board," finding that the Electric boat is superior in all particulars (page 308).

June 2.—Unanimous report of the board on construction, approving the findings of the Marix board. The same approved by Admiral Dewey and the Secretary of the Navy (pages 308-311).

June 29.—Prior to this date Mr. John C. Lake, vice-president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, requests the Secretary of the Navy to refer to the Attorney-General the question whether the Government is bound to let all the contracts to the winner in the test (pp. 1225-1226). Senator Thurston, counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, writes the Secretary of the Navy, urging that the question be referred to the Attorney-General (p. 1035). He subsequently filed a brief with the Department in behalf of his client (p. 1040).

July 30.—The Attorney-General gives an opinion in favor of the contention of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (p. 271).

August 7.—Mr. J. C. Lake, vice-president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, writes to Mr. LILLEY as follows:

[The Lake Torpedo Boat Company, submarine torpedo boats. Simon Lake, president; J. C. Lake, vice-president; L. B. Miller, treasurer; Henry J. Miller, secretary.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 7, 1907.

Hon. G. J. LILLEY,

Member of Congress, Waterbury, Conn.

DEAR MR. LILLEY: As you are probably advised, the Attorney-General has given an opinion in accordance with our views—that the late legislation of Congress does not interfere with the absolute discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for submarines. This of course is very gratifying, but strong efforts will be made by the Holland people to secure contracts for the greater part of the present appropriation of $3,000,000.

I had hoped to see you in person, but am confined to my bed under the advice of physician, and I therefore have asked the bearer, Mr. A. R. Neff, to go to Waterbury for the purpose of laying the matter before you. He will give you Mr. Thurston's brief, the opinion of the Attorney-General, and also show you the telegram and letters we have addressed to the Secretary of the Navy in California.

While we do not anticipate that the Secretary will authorize the Assistant Secretary to make these awards before the Secretary returns to Washington, yet there is danger that he may do so. In view of this, I trust that you will give careful consideration to the facts Mr. Neff will present, and I respectfully request you to address a telegram to the Secretary and supplement it by as strong a letter as I know you can write, urging him not to decide as to how the appropriation shall be expended until he can return to Washington and personally examine not only the reports of the seagoing tests, but the plans and specifications submitted with our bids. I am satisfied that if you will do this, the Secretary will become convinced that the Lake Company should be awarded contracts for at least one-half of the boats authorized by the appropriation.

This is a critical time for the Lake Company, and a decision in its favor along the lines suggested will be of the utmost value. Please make this letter to the Secretary as strong as possible, and I assure you that any efforts in our behalf will be very greatly appreciated.

You know that the strongest possible efforts will be made by our competitor to enlist some very strong political advocacy for their boats, and I feel that this is a time when the State of Connecticut, through you, can be heard to great advantage.

Respectfully,

Vice-President.

(Page 1310.)

August 2.—The above letter was taken to Waterbury by Abner R. Neff, who was commissioned with a special message from Mr. J. C. Lake, to Mr. LILLEY. Spends the night at Mr. LILLEY's hotel (page 1311).

August 10.—At the request of Mr. Lake and Neff, Mr. LILLEY sent the following telegram:

WATERBURY, CONN., August 10, 1907.

Hon. VICTOR H. METCALF:

Your favorable consideration interests my constituents Lake Company solicited. See letter.

GEO. L. LILLEY.

(Page 1502.)

He reinforces the telegram by the following letter:

[GEORGE L. LILLEY, at large, Connecticut, Naval Affairs. House of Representatives United States, Washington, D. C.]

(Stamped:) Office of the Secretary, Navy Department. Received Sept. 3, 1907.

WATERBURY, CONN., August 10, 1907.

SIR: I understand the late legislation of Congress does not interfere with the absolute discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for submarines, and it will no doubt appeal to you that for the best results keen and active competition must supplant monopoly. Such competition will benefit the Navy in two ways:

1. A monopoly of the business by one company would result in exorbitant prices after this policy had destroyed its competitors, but competition means the best for the least money.

2. A monopoly of the business would do away with the keen rivalry for improvements. Active competition will bring out the best in the shortest time.

I sincerely hope that before awarding the contract you will examine not only the reports of the sea-going tests, but also the plans and specifications submitted by the Lake Company, and that you will see your way clear to divide the business.

Yours, very sincerely,

GEO. L. LILLEY.

To the Honorable VICTOR H. METCALF,
Secretary of the Navy.
(Copy sent to Fouts Springs.)

(Page 1503.)

September 23.—Mr. Lilley sends the following letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

[George L. Lilley, at large, Connecticut—Naval Affairs. House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.]

(Stamped:) Office of the Secretary, Navy Department, received September 24, 1907.

The Honorable VICTOR H. METCALF,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: My constituent, Mr. J. C. Lake, writes me you are in doubt as to the intention of the Naval Committee and the House in the matter of submarines.

As for the attitude of the House toward Mr. Robert's argument, nobody listened to it when it was made. Neither the House nor the untrammelled members of the Naval Committee would care whether the boats were on paper or completed, as long as when delivered to the Government they would be equal to any boat. And as I understand it the Lake people do not ask you to accept any boat unless it fulfills all the conditions of the contract.

I am certain that the House would vote against monopoly. Congress clearly showed its disposition when in the appropriation for the last two battle ships it stipulated that with any one company but one ship should be contracted for.

Among the well-meaning Members of Congress the Lake people have more friends because they have never employed the methods of the Holland type people. It is well known that the company Mr. Roberts appears to represent is doing more to-day in the employment of questionable methods to intimidate Members of Congress and the Naval Committee than all other corporations in the United States.

Yours, very truly,

GEO. L. LILLEY.

WATERBURY, CONN., September 23, 1907.

December.—Mr. J. C. Lake entertains at luncheon at the New Willard Hotel the Senators and Representatives from Connecticut (page 1181).

Ex-Senator Thurston, the counsel for the company, advises the delegation as to what can be done for the interest of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (pages 1206-8).

1908.

January.—The Senators and Representatives call on the Secretary of the Navy in a body, and urge giving a contract to the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (pages 1322, 1504, 1511).

February 7.—Signing of a $450,000 contract between the Government and the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (page 314).

Ex-Senator Thurston requests of Mr. Foss, chairman of the Naval Committee of the House, an opportunity to present the views of the Lake Company respecting the form of the submarine item in this year's bill (page 1051).

February 5.—Representative SPERRY, of Connecticut, introduced in the House an independent bill, drawn by Ex-Senator Thurston, for an appropriation for submarines to be expended in a way that would this year again admit the Lake Company to competition.

February 6.—Ex-Senator Thurston makes another request of Chairman Foss, in writing, for a hearing in behalf of the Lake Company (page 1052).

February 10.—Form of naval bill agreed upon by committee with the provision relating to submarines, to which the Lake Company and Mr. LILLEY objected (page 1061).

It is an exciting session of the committee. After adjournment Mr. LILLEY sees Neff and tells him "that the thing had failed and said that they had a pretty hot struggle in there" (page 1201).

[On being questioned as to whether he did not say at this meeting of the committee, "That some of the other Members were nothing better than traveling salesmen for the Electric Boat Company," Mr. LILLEY refused to swear as to what he had said in the committee. His entire testimony on this subject is as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. LILLEY, have you at any time said to a newspaper man—I ask you this because you are reported in the newspapers, I have a clipping here somewhere, to have said that other members or some members of the Naval Committee were nothing more than traveling salesmen for certain torpedo-boat companies?—A. Not in that language.

"Q. Did you use anything bearing that interpretation?—A. What I said I said in executive session of the Naval Committee the day the vote was taken on the naval programme. I think it appears in the testimony here.

"Q. It was not executive to us; we haven't got it, but we did read it in the papers.—A. I gave no interview of that character.

"Q. Did you say it in the Naval Committee?—A. Not in those words.

"Q. That some of the other members were nothing better than traveling salesmen for the Electric Boat Company?—A. Not in those words.

"Q. Anything that would bear that interpretation?—A. Different people put different constructions on.

"Q. Perhaps if you would tell us what you did say.—A. I do not recall. I did not charge my memory with those things.

"Q. That is an important matter; did you not use some language very much like that?—A. I have given no interview to any newspaper of that character.

"Q. I know, but that is not what I ask. Did you make some such utterance in the Naval Committee?—A. Why, Mr. OLMSTED, I do not remember just what I said in the Naval Committee.

"Q. Did you say something like that?—A. I won't swear as to what I said.

"Q. Will you state that you did not say something of that kind?—A. I won't testify either way, except that I said nothing in that language, as you have put it" (page 1502).

February 12.—Fred Brown Whitney, vice-president of the Lake Submarine Company and personal attorney of Mr. Simon Lake, mails an anonymous letter to Mr. Carmichael, of the Detroit Free Press, suggesting the bribery of Representative LOUD by the Electric Boat Company (page 1783).

The same day Representative LILLEY leaves Washington (pages 1525-1598) for Connecticut. He claims that before leaving he directed his secretary, Webster, an inexperienced young man of 23, who had been his clerk for only a few months, to prepare a resolution for an investigation of the methods of the Electric Boat Company and the conduct of Members, without giving him any instructions as to whom he should consult or in what form the resolution should be prepared (pages 1363-1364, 1598).

February 13.—Whitney sends to a New York paper a fictitious statement containing, among other things, a general estimate of alleged excessive profits in the contracts of the Electric Boat Company with the Government. His statement contains the following paragraphs:

"It is our unanimous opinion that it is best to have the full quotations sent you printed, so that our friends can use naval opinions with Members as from newspaper authority."

"Memorandum showing lack of economy in submarine at proposed cost of $1,476,296.60 more than contractor testified they were worth."

"The committee thinks it necessary to get prominent officers' ideas and opinions before public, so that other newspapers will start editorial discussion of the problem that is far more serious than surface indications tell" (page 1783).

February 14.—Mr. J. C. Lake, vice-president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, who has heretofore been in charge of the Washington offices, leaves Washington (page 1214).

Mr. Simon Lake and Mr. LILLEY have interview at New Haven (pages 104-1062).

February 15.—The fictitious figures of excessive profits concocted by Whitney, $1,476,296.60, appear in a New York paper.

Whitney sends to Frank Edinborough, formerly a clerk of Congressman LOUD and an aspirant for Mr. LOUD's seat in Congress, an anonymous letter accusing Mr. LOUD of bribery by the Electric Boat Company, saying, "LOUD voted for the $1,476,296.60 graft" (page 1783).

Mr. Royal W. Thompson, secretary of Senator BULKELEY, at Webster's request, makes the draft, as subsequently introduced, of Mr. LILLEY's resolution calling for an investigation (page 1711).

February 18.—Mr. LILLEY returns to Washington. Shows draft of his resolution to Representative SHERMAN (page 1725), and says he will not introduce the resolution if Mr. SHERMAN can bring about an amendment to the submarine clause in the Naval Committee's bill (pages 1725-1726).

The evidence of this is given by Mr. SHERMAN on pages 1725-1726 and corroborated by Mr. LILLEY, pages 1364-1365. Mr. SHERMAN said: "Q. Are you acquainted with Representative GEORGE L. LILLEY, of Connecticut?—A. I am.

"Q. Did you have any conversation with him relative to submarine legislation and the introduction of any resolution?—A. He had with me.

"Q. Tell us what it was.—A. A few days before Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution he called me into the Republican club room and showed me a resolution which he said he proposed to introduce. Whether it is identical with the one he did introduce of course I can not now say. I read it and I can only give the substance of the conversation. He said in substance that such a resolution would stir up a fuss, and I intimated that I thought so, too, and he said in substance that if the action of the committee could be moved so that the competition for submarine boats could be open to other competitors that he would not introduce the resolution, and he asked me to see some member of the Naval Committee, with the hope that seeing such member might possibly induce the committee to change its action.

"Q. Did you tell him at that time that you would do that?—A. I told him I would not; that the Navy Committee were supposedly conversant with the whole subject, and that I was not, and that I did not propose to approach them on a matter that they knew about and that I did not" (page 1725).

February 20.—Mr. LILLEY's resolution 253 dropped in the basket on the Clerk's desk late in the afternoon (page 1279).

The first of a series of postal cards extolling the merits of the Lake type of boat prepared in New York, by Mr. Robert G. Skerrett, an old employee of the Lake company, mailed in the afternoon in New York City to all Senators and Representatives and to Government officials in Washington (page 835).

In the evening Abner R. Neff, Washington agent for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, calls on Mr. LILLEY in his rooms at the New Willard, and offers the services of Ex-Senator Thurston, counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, in conducting the investigation (page 1322).

February 21.—A carefully prepared and authorized interview by Mr. LILLEY appears in the Washington Post (page 30) hinting at the charge against Representative LOUD.

The second in the series of Lake company's postal cards mailed in New York City (page 836).

February 21 to 25.—Interviews with Mr. LILLEY appear in numerous papers, in which he accuses Members of Congress of being bribed by the Electric Boat Company, mentioning several by name, and the charges against Representative LOUD appear in Michigan papers.

February 25.—Mr. LILLEY appears before the Committee on Rules, makes his charges, and reads a statement on his responsibility as a Member of the House, which statement was prepared by ex-Senator Thurston, of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (pages 1575-1576).

February 27.—Mr. LILLEY introduced House resolution 264, reciting excess profit to the Electric Boat Company in Government contracts of $1,476,296.60, which resolution calls upon the Navy Department for cost of construction of the Electric Boat Company's torpedo boats. The resolution was prepared by Neff, who obtained the fictitious figures from newspaper clippings given him by Whitney (pages 1490-1492, 1499, 1500, 1501, 1545, 1585).

March 6.—Committee on Rules reports House resolution 288, which is unanimously passed, and this committee appointed.

March 9.—Mr. LILLEY appears before your committee, but refuses to give the committee the knowledge in his possession on which his charges are based (page 15). He reads a statement prepared by ex-Senator Thurston, attorney for the Lake Company, giving a list of witnesses furnished by the Lake Company (page 1203).

March 12.—Mr. LILLEY again appears before your committee and reads another statement prepared by ex-Senator Thurston, counsel for the Lake Company, in connection with Attorneys Brown and Judson, and then for the first time consents to be examined under oath as to the information on which his charges were based (pages 1202, 1576).

Mr. Robert G. Skerrett, an old employee of the Lake Company, hands to the Scientific American and Harper's Weekly articles extolling the merits of the Lake type of boat, which appear in the Scientific American of March 21 and 28 and Harper's Weekly of April 4 (pages 1796-1798).

March 16.—At the hearings on this day Mr. LILLEY hands to the committee a large number of typewritten questions, addressed to the chairman of the committee, and bearing Mr. LILLEY's signature. Most of the communications handed in close with one or the other of these paragraphs:

"Not being an attorney, and being refused by your committee to participate in this investigation through an attorney, I must leave the responsibility, the line of the examination, and its thoroughness to your members, in whose skill as attorneys I have great confidence.

"Not being an attorney, and being denied the privilege by your committee of having witnesses examined or cross-examined by an attorney qualified to bring out the real facts, I am compelled to leave the general character and questioning of this witness to the superior wisdom and ability of the learned attorneys, members of this committee."

While the examination progresses from day to day Mr. LILLEY submits numerous other sets of questions similarly prepared, which display a most exhaustive knowledge of the history of the development of submarines, the cost of construction, and the business methods of the Electric Boat Company.

April 2.—Frank L. Edinborough appears before the committee and produces an anonymous letter received from Whitney attacking Representative LOUD (page 726).

April 4.—Mr. Edinborough appears before the committee and produces an anonymous letter received by him from Whitney attacking Representative LOUD (page 769).

About this time Whitney is taken ill and confined to his room, so that he is unable to respond to a subpoena or appear as a witness before the committee.

April 15.—For the first time during the hearing it is disclosed that the questions submitted by Mr. LILLEY were not based on any information of his own, but were prepared by counsel of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (pages 1186-1188, 1190-1191, 1194-1196, 1309, 1202-1203, 1576).

April 30.—Whitney, now in the hospital and unable to appear before the committee, sends physician's certificate to that effect by his counsel, and an affidavit confessing the authorship of the anonymous letters and of the fictitious figures of the excessive profit to the Electric Boat Company in its submarine contracts, and stating that when he mailed these documents "he had good reason to believe that a resolution would be introduced in the House of Representatives for an investigation of the methods of the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor, the Holland Boat Company."

It needs no argument to show that there is a logical sequence in the foregoing interrelated events that tell the history of what led up to and constituted the propaganda which was designed as indicated in the frank admission of Simon Lake to "educate Members of Congress up to the point of recognizing the merits of the Lake type of boat."

Mr. LILLEY's resolution and charges and the investigation that followed form an important part in the propaganda. Mr. LILLEY testifies that he talked with no one connected with the Lake Boat Company concerning his intention to introduce such a resolution, and that no one connected with the company knew of his intention. The officers of the Lake company say that they had no knowledge that it was to be introduced. According to the evidence, both Webster and Thompson, however, knew a week beforehand that it was to be introduced, and Whitney swears that "he had good reason to believe that such a resolution would be introduced."

But whether or not the Lake Company's officers knew that it would be introduced is quite immaterial. If they did not, they showed a miraculous degree of preparedness in availing themselves of the vast opportunity which this resolution opened up for carrying on their propaganda. A few hours after its introduction Neff, the agent of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, was ready to make an arrangement with Mr. LILLEY to consult with the general counsel of the company concerning the conduct of the investigation. And from that time until the completion of the examination of all the witnesses named by Mr. LILLEY the conduct of his case was in the hands of the counsel and agent of that company.

By stating on his honor and responsibility as a Member that he had information not based on hearsay that required an investigation respecting the conduct of his colleagues, he invoked the entire machinery of the House of Representatives to institute a proceeding against a private corporation for the benefit of another private corporation. The gravity of this offense is apparent when it is considered that in no other way by any private citizen in any civil or criminal proceeding in any of the courts of law could such an examination be carried on as has been carried on in this proceeding by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company against its rival through the agency of Mr. LILLEY. And the gravity of his offense is not lessened by the disclaimer made by Mr. LILLEY and the officers of the Lake Company, that the latter did not induce him to offer the resolution.

For six months prior to the introduction of the resolution Mr. LILLEY had been doing everything in his power to help the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. After the introduction of the resolution the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, through its officers and agents, did all in its power to help Mr. LILLEY. Your committee therefore has no doubt, and feels that no one who reads the evidence or even the foregoing brief chronology can have a doubt, that Mr. LILLEY's resolution was not introduced to secure an investigation, but was introduced to secure legislation. A further analysis of the entire evidence will confirm this finding.

DETAILS OF ALL OF MR. LILLEY'S SOURCES OF INFORMATION.

In view of all the evidence gathered in this investigation, Mr. LILLEY's statement to the Committee on Rules—"I shall be very glad to go into this matter just as soon as this resolution is passed and the committee is appointed, and I assure you, gentlemen, I am not talking on hearsay; I know my ground, and I know that I can prove these things before a committee that means business"—makes it important to ascertain what he knew and probably could prove at the time of making this statement, and classify the whole of his evidence in accordance with the demonstrated sources of his information. The wide latitude Mr. LILLEY allowed himself in making his charges reveals that he has relied upon facts within his own knowledge, facts within the knowledge of others, newspaper reports, illogical assumption, rumors, suspicions, and misstatements too often stubbornly adhered to.

FACTS WITHIN HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE.

He knew that Mr. Taylor had repeatedly urged him to vote for submarines prior to the naval appropriation bill of 1908.

He knew that Mr. Kellogg had argued with him the wisdom of additional appropriation for the construction of submarine boats, and that Mr. Kellogg represented the Electric Boat Company.

He knew that Mr. Kellogg introduced Mr. Ferry to him, and made an appointment for Mr. Ferry to have an interview with him on the subject of submarine boats. He knew that Mr. Ferry did interview him on that subject.

He knew the terms of the Loudenslager amendment to the naval appropriation bill of the present year, and that Mr. LOUDENSLAGER offered it.

He knew of his own votes in the Naval Committee in favor of submarines in the naval bill of 1906.

He knew of the votes on the various motions and amendments respecting battle ships and submarines in the pending naval appropriation bill.

FACTS WITHIN THE KNOWLEDGE OF OTHERS.

He knew that Mr. Gordon, who lived in Mr. LOUD's district, had been employed by the Electric Boat Company, because Mr. LOUD and Mr. Foss told him so.

He knew that Mr. Spear had offered to assist Representative HOBSON in his effort to obtain appointment on the Naval Committee, because Mr. HOBSON told him so.

ASSUMPTIONS.

He assumes that the Electric Boat Company set Mr. Taylor on him to influence him in favor of submarine legislation, and persists in this assumption in the face of Mr. Taylor's sworn statement that he approached him on his own initiative and in his own interest, and swears that Mr. Taylor is an honorable man and that he (LILLEY) would believe what he (Taylor) swears.

He assumes that the Electric Boat Company and Admiral Bowles, president of the Fore River Ship Building Company, sent Mr. Ferry to him to influence him to vote for Holland submarines in the face of the denial both of Mr. Ferry and of Mr. Bowles.

He assumes that Mr. Kellogg sent Mr. Ferry to him by direction of the Electric Boat Company, in face of the denial of the officers of the Electric Boat Company and of Mr. Kellogg, the latter being his (LILLEY's) personal and political friend, and an honorable man worthy of belief as he (LILLEY) swears.

He assumes that the expert naval constructors in the Navy Department could and would testify to the excessive profit of a million or more dollars obtained by the Electric Boat Company on its past contracts and an equal amount of excessive profit if they obtain all the contracts provided for in the Loudenslager amendment, and he persists in his assumption, notwithstanding the testimony of Admiral Capps, the chief constructor of the Navy, that no such excessive profit had been made or could have been made under the contracts executed or to be executed.

He assumes that an investigation would prove that the boats owned by the United States and proposed to be purchased under the Loudenslager amendment are, and would be, inferior in type, size, power, armament, and efficiency to boats now in European navies, notwithstanding the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy, the chief constructor of the Navy, and other witnesses not connected with the Navy Department, that, so far as it was possible to make such a comparison, no such alleged fact could be established.

He assumed, and persisted in the assumption, though unable to support it by proof or probability, that $745 per ton is a reasonable price and as much as the Government should pay for submarine boats, and upon this false assumption he charges that this is the inducement to the Electric Boat Company to corrupt or attempt to corrupt Congress to legislate in its favor.

SUSPICION.

Mr. LILLEY stated his fundamental suspicion to the Committee on Rules as follows:

"I think the membership of this House is of the very highest quality, and that they are the very best men, usually, from the district from which they come, but with a flock of 383 here it would be strange if there were not some sheep in it that had the rot foot or scabies. I think the disease ought to be eradicated before it spreads."

He alleges that as there is an attorney of the Electric Boat Company in his district, one in Mr. LOUD's district, and one in Texas; that there are other attorneys or agents in the districts of other members of the Naval Committee, and wherever the ground is found favorable, except in the districts of Messrs. Foss, PADGETT, and HOBSON.

Another charge is arraigned under the head of suspicion. Whether or not money has been improperly used or improper methods have been employed to secure favorable action in Congress, can only be successfully shown by an examination of the officers, attorneys, and agents of said companies, and by an examination of the books, accounts, vouchers, checks, and other written memoranda relating to such practice which are in the possession of the officers, attorneys, agents, and representatives of said companies, and when the officers, attorneys, and agents of said companies had sworn positively that no such expenditures had been made by either of them, and that no such accounts had ever been kept on their books because no such expenditure was made, Mr. LILLEY bolstered that fallen suspicion with this further remark:

"Now, I do not expect those books will show any names that checks were drawn for campaign funds, but I do expect that there will be some such fund as the 'yellow-dog' fund in the New York insurance investigation."

In his charge that contributions were made to Members of Congress who were on the House Naval Committee, contributions to elect some and defeat others, Mr. LILLEY relies on the same suspicion that the officers and books of the Electric Boat Company would furnish a proof in a suspected "yellow-dog" account.

RUMOR.

To the authority of rumor Mr. LILLEY refers his charge against the Electric Boat Company's contributing to the campaign fund of members of the Naval Committee in maintaining an expensive lobby at Washington, and in efforts made to subvert or unfairly influence the public press in its utterances and criticism of the said companies, and appropriations made for submarines.

NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. LILLEY cites an article from the Detroit News dated February 21, and another dated February 22, 1908, as the proof justifying his statement that Mr. Gordon was employed for the sole purpose of endeavoring to secure favorable action on the part of Representative LOUD for such legislation as the Electric Boat Company might desire. Whereas the article offered in proof of this states that—

"The hint has been thrown out that his influence for the Holland submarine boat was secured by a species of intimidation."

If Mr. LILLEY did not know the contents of this article before he introduced his resolution, he would have been without a semblance of truth as to Messrs. Gordon and LOUD. If he did not know the contents of the second publication before he introduced his resolution, he would not have had the benefit of Edinborough's insinuation contained therein.

If, however, it is conceded that he knew the contents of each, it was within his power to ask his colleague (LOUD) on the Naval Committee whether he knew or believed that Mr. Gordon was employed by the Electric Boat Company to intimidate him by threat of opposition, or otherwise, in supporting submarine legislation favorable to them. He could with equal facility have inquired what statements Mr. LOUD made to Edinborough that could lead Edinborough to believe that Mr. Gordon was lobbying with him (LOUD) for the Holland concern. These two inquiries addressed to Mr. LOUD would have reached an original source of information as against the repetition of a "hint" and the publication of Edinborough's "suspicion."

ANALYSIS OF MR. LILLEY'S EVIDENCE CONCERNING ALL THE FACTS IN HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE WHEN HE INTRODUCED HIS RESOLUTION.

In his statements to the Committee on Rules, Mr. LILLEY said: "In the last Congress a large manufacturer in my town, an intimate friend of mine, who would probably have as much influence with me as any man in my State, told me that he had the promise of a large order if I would vote for submarines (page 7)."

Mr. Franklin A. Taylor, of Waterbury, Conn., vice-president and manager of the Randolph-Clowes Company, engaged in the business of manufacturing brass and copper, testified that he was the man referred to by Mr. LILLEY in that statement, and Mr. LILLEY subsequently stated that it was Mr. Taylor to whom he referred. Mr. Taylor said:

"Mr. LILLEY and I were personal friends. I met him frequently and did not hesitate to discuss with him frankly my interest in submarine construction. I told Mr. LILLEY the amount of business the Navy Department did in the Naugatuck Valley. I suggested to him to talk with his constituents; that it would be a good scheme to start at Bridgeport and go to Winsted, and told him of the things manufactured; I went into it very thoroughly; I told him our business in the matter of tubing and sheathing and brass plates, and all that sort of thing. I said to him that the business amounted to several millions a year, and I think he felt at the time that it was a very much bigger thing than he had any idea of. I did not leave any stone unturned to influence him to vote for submarine boats."

"These conversations related to legislation of 1905 or 1906. Mr. LILLEY was influenced in his first vote on submarines by the request of his constituents who were to secure orders as a result of any appropriation for submarines. Mr. LILLEY was, I think, opposed to submarines from the beginning. On one occasion I met Mr. LILLEY in Waterbury, and, as he says, shook my fist at him; I do not think I have missed an opportunity to shake my fist at him, and tell him to vote for submarines every time I have met him. This was not intended as a threat or an act of intimidation, and Mr. LILLEY took it in a friendly spirit. I had no doubt that the conversations had with him were influential in gaining his vote when the matter first went through Congress. I had very good reasons for thinking so, because when he came home after the committee had voted he said to me: 'I voted "yes," Franklin, and your face was in front of me when I voted.' So I felt that I had influenced Mr. LILLEY, and I had nothing to be ashamed of in it."

"The articles which we manufacture and which enter into the construction of submarine and torpedo boats generally are sold to the Electric Boat Company, the Lake Boat Company, or any other company that manufactures torpedo boats. I was looking out for the business from the corporation that got the contracts, and it didn't bother me a bit nor did I care which one of them got the contracts. We manufacture brass and copper piping and air flasks, all of which went into submarines and other kinds of ships, and there was no possibility of any legitimate share of any appropriation made by Congress passing into the hands of anyone else. I have had no conversation with Mr. LILLEY with reference to influencing him to vote for submarines in this year's bill. The Electric Boat Company never intimated to me in any way that they desired me to approach or attempt to influence Mr. LILLEY to vote for submarine boats, nor did they ever give or tender to me any order contingent upon anything that I might do to induce Mr. LILLEY to support submarine legislation. What I did was always on my own initiative and from my own instincts of my business interest."

Mr. LILLEY, in testifying in reference to Mr. Taylor's approaching him on the subject of submarines, said:

"I did not charge Mr. Taylor with having done anything wrong in trying to obtain a large order for goods. I am not making any complaint against Mr. Taylor in approaching me."

Mr. LILLEY's attitude with respect to Mr. Taylor is one of complete exoneration of Mr. Taylor from any improper motive or wrongful act in all that he said and did to him with respect to submarine legislation. He substantially complains as follows: "But I do charge the party that set him on a Member of Congress for that purpose is doing something that ought not to be permitted," and the emphatic testimony of Mr. Taylor is that he was "set on," as he says, "always on my own initiative and from my own instincts of my business interest." So that, knowing Mr. Taylor as well as Mr. LILLEY swears he did, regarding him as a man of high character, meeting him frequently socially, enjoying his confidence and support politically, Mr. LILLEY had only to ask Mr. Taylor whether the Electric Boat Company had inspired him to urge submarine legislation upon him (LILLEY).

And Mr. Taylor's answer would doubtless have been in conformity with his sworn statement on the subject—that he was acting on his own initiative and in his own interest and without the suggestion or dictation of any other person or corporation, and if Mr. LILLEY had accepted this answer as the truth, as in his testimony he swears that he would believe what Mr. Taylor says, it would have been an end of this groundless suspicion that the Electric Boat Company was endeavoring to influence him through his friend Mr. Taylor, and there would have been no truthful basis for this instance in Mr. LILLEY's personal experience related to the Committee on Rules and made one of the charges on which this investigation was based. It is a conspicuous instance of Mr. LILLEY's stubborn refusal to substitute an easily ascertained fact for groundless suspicion.

MR. LILLEY'S EVIDENCE CONCERNING HIS FRIEND, MR. JOHN P. KELLOGG.

Mr. LILLEY. At the same time there came down here a lawyer in politics who had been a member of the State committee and the town committee where I live; was then; who probably had as much to do with my being in Congress as any man. He came here to Washington and stayed with me, and he was certainly employed by the Electric Boat Company. (p. 7).

This charge relates to Mr. John P. Kellogg, esq., a lawyer of Waterbury, Conn., who is assistant State attorney of New Haven County, and who has been a member of the Republican State central committee and chairman of the Republican town committee of Waterbury. He has known Mr. LILLEY for twenty-five or thirty years; his political and social relations during that time were exceedingly friendly. He was employed by the Electric Boat Company in 1906 to "counsel with them in regard to matters in Connecticut generally, where they had a competing company and had some little trouble with the company," and also to give them professional assistance in any way (p. 370). And for this service he received an annual retainer; has conducted no litigation for them; has visited Washington on business of the Electric Boat Company twice. First in January, 1907, at the direction of Mr. Frost; came to discuss matters of pending legislation with Mr. LILLEY.

I think it was the month of December, the latter part, when Mr. LILLEY was home during the Christmas holidays. I went to him then and told him that I had been employed by the Electric Boat Company, and told him through whom, through Mr. Frost, and discussed with him at that time legislation with regard to submarine boats.

In substance, what I said was based upon the necessity for submarine boats, for the defense or secondary defense of harbors, and also considerable of the conversation, as I recall it—I am talking about things now that happened over a year ago—and as I recall it, it was not only the necessity, but whether they were available, whether they were of advantage to secondary defense.

Mr. Kellogg came to Washington in January, 1907, while the naval appropriation bill was pending in the committee, and had other conversations with Mr. LILLEY on the necessity and advantage of the Government purchasing additional submarines, and that such purchases should be made as the result of competitive tests, and while Mr. LILLEY did not agree with Mr. Kellogg that submarines possessed all the merits Mr. Kellogg claimed for them, he admitted that there was sufficient good in them to warrant the purchasing of a limited number. Mr. Kellogg swears that Mr. LILLEY never expressed any disapproval of his conversations with him on this subject, nor did he express any disapproval of the method adopted by Mr. Kellogg to persuade him to his point of view. On the contrary, Mr. Kellogg swears that Mr. LILLEY has told him since the investigation began that there was nothing he (Kellogg) had ever said to him at any time that anyone could not fairly say to him.

Mr. Kellogg admits that he spoke to Mr. Taylor and Mr. Ferry about conferences with Mr. LILLEY on the subject of submarines. He further swears that he did not intimate to either Mr. Taylor or Mr. Ferry, nor did he suggest to them to say to Mr. LILLEY, that they might secure orders in case of favorable submarine legislation. He understood that both companies had been having orders right along and would keep on having them whether Mr. LILLEY voted for or against additional submarines. He swears further that he never had any authority from the officers of the Electric Boat Company to promise any of these manufacturers that they should receive orders in case of favorable submarine legislation. Nor did he ever state to any manufacturer that they would receive orders from the Electric Boat Company in case of favorable submarine legislation.

In brief, Mr. Kellogg's evidence fully and frankly states the time, manner, and scope of his employment by the Electric Boat Company, and he details with frankness the substance and nature of his conversations with Mr. LILLEY on the subject of submarines, and Mr. LILLEY himself exonerates him from any blame or censure for anything that he said or did by right of his employment by the Electric Boat Company, but charges, as he said in the case of Mr. Taylor, that it was an improper practice for the Electric Boat Company to employ a prominent and competent attorney who was his personal and political friend to present in a legitimate and honorable manner the necessity for submarine legislation.

MR. LILLEY'S EVIDENCE CONCERNING HIS CONSTITUENT, MR. CHARLES FERRY.

Mr. Charles Ferry, of Bridgeport, Conn., metallurgist and salesman of the Bridgeport Brass Company, went to Washington in February, 1908, by direction of Mr. F. H. Kingsbury, jr., manager of the company, to get all the information he could as to the possibility of the Government purchasing additional submarines, and to meet and confer with Mr. Kellogg in Washington for that purpose. Mr. Kellogg told Mr. Ferry that he thought that Mr. LILLEY ought to know that the Bridgeport Brass Company made a great deal of material, a portion of which had been used in submarine boats, and introduced him to Mr. LILLEY, with whom he made an appointment to talk on this subject the next day at Mr. LILLEY's office in the House Office Building.

In the interview between Messrs. Ferry and LILLEY, Mr. Ferry swears:

"I told Mr. LILLEY that I understood that the Government was likely to purchase more submarine boats, that inasmuch as we had made material which we supposed had been used in submarine boats, or at least purchased by the company that constructed the Holland boat, we thought it was perfectly fair that he should know this, and if he could consistently vote for that bill we would be glad to have him do so. I told him that I was seeking business, or prospects of business, with unusual diligence at this time, because we were running short-handed and not through the full week, and that we never needed an order as badly as at that time. Mr. LILLEY asked me if I came to ask him to vote for a bill appropriating a large sum of money for the construction of submarines. I told him I did not, unless he could do so consistently. To my best knowledge and belief, I did not tell Mr. LILLEY that I or my company had the promise of an order from the Holland or Electric Boat Company, if he (LILLEY) would vote right on that proposition; I did not know that any promise was made by the Holland or Electric Boat Company to me or to my company that if LILLEY voted right we would secure an order."

"Neither Mr. Kingsbury or Mr. Kellogg gave me any such information, nor were any such conditions in my mind when I conferred with

Mr. LILLEY. LILLEY asked me how much material of our manufacture was used in a submarine boat. I told him I had no information or data upon the subject, and therefore could make no intelligent estimate. He said: "How much do you imagine would be used in submarine boats to be provided for?" I still told him I had not any idea. As I remember it, he said: "A hundred thousand dollars' worth?" I said I did not believe as much as that. Then he came down to $20,000, and I said: "Possibly, and possibly a little more." Then he asked me how much profit we made on the material. I told him I was not in a position to say, but, for a guess, it might be 10 per cent. So that he arrived at a profit of $20,000, as an example, and wanted to know if I came there to ask him to vote for a bill in which we might make a possible profit of $2,000, and I still told him that I was not there to ask him to vote for a bill unless he could consistently do so.

"I told Mr. LILLEY that we had received so much business from the shipbuilders who constructed the Holland boat that we naturally felt sanguine and interested in any bill of that sort—sanguine about receiving orders from that concern. I think that he intimated that he would vote for the bill on account—mainly on account of the extreme desire of high officials who wished submarines, particularly the Secretary of the Navy. He expressed his preference for battle ships to submarines. I did not discuss with him any form of legislation intended to provide for submarines. I had no experience with such matters and knew nothing about the necessary form of legislation in providing for them. We employ about 1,500 men when our plant is in full operation, and I should think our monthly sales when we are running full might be $250,000 a month. An order amounting to $20,000 would have been desirable. My company has never taken an active part in political matters, and it has never sought to influence me or the men, so far as I know.

"Neither Mr. Bowles, president of the Fore River Ship Building Company, nor any of its agents, officers, or attorneys, offered to pay or promised to pay me anything for coming here to see Mr. LILLEY last February; neither did my company have any promise of orders from anybody if I came here and secured the vote of Mr. LILLEY in behalf of submarines. Mr. Bowles never suggested to me that I should influence Mr. LILLEY or any other Member of Congress from Connecticut or elsewhere, either by word, letter, or any other manner. He told me at one time that he thought Mr. HILL did not know that we made material for the Holland boat, and he thought that it would be desirable that Mr. HILL should know it; but he did not suggest, as I remember, that I should write or speak to Mr. HILL about it; and while I neither wrote nor spoke to him on the subject, I talked with Mr. Enos, who expected to go to Washington, and he promised to tell Mr. HILL that we were making a large amount of material for the Fore River Ship Building Company, a portion of which was used in submarines, and Mr. Enos told me that he reported that to Mr. HILL. That was about three years ago. I never attempted to get Congressman HILL to withdraw his support from the Lake people of Bridgeport at the request of Mr. Bowles on the condition that if I succeeded, he would give me $100,000 of orders; no such conversation ever occurred with Mr. Bowles. I never had any communication with Mr. HILL concerning submarines, except the message sent to him by Mr. Enos above referred to."

On this subject Mr. J. C. Lake testified that Mr. Ferry told him some two years ago that—

"He (Ferry) had been requested or approached by what he termed him, Admiral Bowles, as he was a representative of the brass company and did considerable business with him, and that he had spoken to Mr. Enos about it and wanted to do all that he possibly could to help the Electric Boat Company, because if they got orders, why, their company would get business from Admiral Bowles. He said that Admiral Bowles was a personal friend of his, and he (Bowles) requested that he (Ferry) go to see Mr. Enos about it to see whether he (Enos) could be of any help to him (Ferry) in the way of getting appropriation for the Electric Boat Company, which would really go to the benefit of his (Ferry's) company."

It will be observed that Mr. Ferry swears that Admiral Bowles did not send him to Mr. HILL to cease his effort in behalf of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company at Washington, and on the same subject Admiral Bowles in his testimony gives a very full and explicit statement of the interview between himself and Mr. Ferry, covering both Ferry's communication with Mr. HILL and with Mr. LILLEY.

ADMIRAL FRANCIS TIFFANY BOWLES CORROBORATES MR. FERRY'S TESTIMONY.

Q. Will you please state what that conversation was with him?—A. Mr. Ferry's company, the Bridgeport Brass Company, have had for about two years our contracts for all brass and copper piping, rods, and so forth. And it is customary where builders confine their orders to one concern to expect supply men to assist them in getting business, and I had an understanding to that effect with Mr. Ferry when I gave him our contract.

Q. What did you ask him to do?—A. I asked him on one occasion to see that Representative of HILL of Connecticut, understood the relations existing between his company and mine and the extent of the business which in that way came to Bridgeport.

Q. Did you ask him to influence Mr. HILL as to his legislative action?—A. I did not. I asked him to inform him fully in regard to the business which came from my company to Bridgeport.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Ferry to influence Mr. LILLEY as to his legislative action?—A. I did not. I never mentioned Mr. LILLEY's name to Mr. Ferry. I had one other conversation on the subject which occurred, I think, some time in February of this year. Mr. Ferry ceased some time ago, last year, to have my contract, because of inefficient service. He came to me in Boston and sought an appointment with me. He said that he had heard through his president, Mr. Kingsbury, I think he named him, that he could do something for me in Washington along the line of submarines. He said that they felt very seriously the loss of my contract; that they had profited by the discipline that I had administered to them, and they would give excellent service. He was very anxious to get it back. He wanted to know if he could do anything for me in the way of submarines in Washington—whether it would be any advantage to him. I told him in the most positive manner that when that contract came around to be awarded again that it would be settled in the interests of my company, as it had been before; that I should be very much pleased at anything he might do for me, but I would make him no promises of any kind, either directly or indirectly, in any manner, shape, or form. I used all those words to him.

Q. Did you in any way inform him or intimate to him that if he could assist in securing favorable legislation for the Electric Boat Company that you would give him a contract?—A. I did not. I took the utmost care to prevent conveying any such idea to his mind.

"Q. In having this conversation with Mr. Ferry, or anybody else along that line, did you do this at the instigation or request of the Electric Boat Company or any of its officers?—A. I did not; this interview was sought wholly by Mr. Ferry. I would like, if the chairman will permit me, to absolutely clear up the Ferry matter without any possibility of doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what we are attempting to do in these closing days. Admiral, to clear up a number of questions about the testimony.—A. Mr. Ferry when he came to me did not mention the name of Mr. LILLEY. I had no idea what he meant when he said that he could do something for me in the way of submarines. He did not describe it in any way. I did not know that he was going to see Mr. LILLEY, and did not ask him to go and see him or to see anyone else. Mr. Ferry, however, after he had been to Washington came back to see me, and he then told me that he had seen Mr. LILLEY. That was the first time that the gentleman's name was mentioned between us. He said that he had tried to explain to Mr. LILLEY the commercial situation in regard to the purchase of brass materials, and that Mr. LILLEY had burst out upon him in a denunciation of submarine boats and the methods that were being pursued here in Washington, and had scared him, Ferry, very much. I told Mr. Ferry that I was exceedingly sorry that any attempt to do something for me should get him into so much trouble, but he need have no anxiety on the subject, so far as his action or mine or my company's was concerned, of any kind at all; that he could go home and be satisfied that he had done what was right, and so had I. That was the end of that episode so far as I was concerned. I might also state—I am anxious to clear the ground of Mr. LILLEY—that if I had wished to influence him in any way or had sought to do it I had the most excellent means, because during the previous year I had transferred my contract from Bridgeport to the American Brass Company, of Ansonia and Waterbury. I negotiated that contract with the president of the American Brass Company myself.

Q. Who is that?—A. Mr. Brooker.

Q. Charles F. Brooker?—A. Yes; and I had some understanding with Mr. Brooker with regard to helping me in getting business in certain territories, but I have never had occasion to take advantage of it. I have never asked Mr. Brooker to say anything for me directly or indirectly, but I had in that gentleman's immediate neighborhood the most excellent means of reaching him in case I had so desired.

CHARGES AGAINST ELECTRIC BOAT COMPANY AND ANALYSIS OF TESTIMONY OF ITS OFFICERS, ATTORNEYS, AND AGENTS.

Although Mr. LILLEY had, as already pointed out, said to the Committee on Rules, "I am not talking on hearsay; I know my grounds, and I know that I can prove these things before a committee that means business," nevertheless, your committee having been appointed, he appeared before us and said:

"Whether or not money has been improperly used or improper methods have been employed to secure favorable action in Congress can only be successfully shown by an examination of the officers, attorneys, and agents of said companies, and by an examination of the books, accounts, vouchers, checks, and other memoranda relating to such practices, which are in the possession of the officers, attorneys, agents, and representatives of said companies."

In other words, having no information himself, he proposed that the officers of the company should be compelled to appear with their books so that it might, by examination, be developed whether or not his broadside of charges had hit anything. He then submitted a list of the officers, attorneys, and agents whom he desired subpoenaed. It subsequently developed that not only his charges, but as well the demand for the summoning of these people with their books, had been framed and placed in his hands by counsel for their rival, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, who was behind the curtain rolling the putty balls for Mr. LILLEY to fire. He had even obtained the list of witnesses from counsel for the Lake Company, but as he failed to give us the addresses we had to call upon him for them, and he, in turn, as appears from the record, had to go back to the counsel for the Lake Company to get them, or some of them.

Your committee sent to Mr. LILLEY blank forms of subpoenas and asked that they, particularly the subpoenas duces tecum, be prepared for those persons whom he desired subpoenaed. He returned them to your committee filled out, as we afterwards learned, by counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. The subpoenas were served and the witnesses appeared and they have all been examined. The following is a brief synopsis of their testimony:

Gen. M. C. Butler, who in March, 1894, retired from the United States Senate after eighteen years of service as Senator from South Carolina, testified that in 1896 or 1897, while a practicing attorney in Washington, he had been employed professionally by the Holland Boat Company and continued as attorney for that company and the Electric Boat Company until a period about four or five years ago, when he gave up his law office in Washington and returned to his own State. He appeared before the Naval Committee of the Senate on several occasions and made arguments in behalf of said companies. He said that he "never appeared in the House and never spoke to a human being in the House. I never spoke to any Senator or Representative on the subject except in the argument before the committee which I made, perhaps, four or five times" (page 74). He said that the boat Holland was brought into the Potomac River and that "I went down on a tug and invited quite a number of Members of Congress and Senators and Representatives, and they had something to eat and something to drink." Admiral Dewey was one of the party. General Butler invited some of the guests. The entertainment was furnished by the company whose boat was making the experiments. Speaking of Representative LILLEY, he said:

"I do not think it is quite fair for a man who has not fortified himself with the facts to attack a man outside of the House, a private citizen, and not give him an opportunity to reply to him. That is what I complain of in this case. I have no apologies to make on earth to him for my employment by that company, not the slightest, but I resent as an offense and as unfair the statement that I belong to what he chooses to call the 'organized lobby.'"

General Butler, having retired several years ago, took no part for or against legislation in the present Congress with reference to submarine boats; he did not appear before any committee nor address any Member of the House; he said he had been at his home in South Carolina "until I got this notice which brought my name in here, and, I think, unfairly and unjustly and falsely" (page 79).

Mr. C. E. Creevy testified that he practically had the management of the business in Washington of the Holland Submarine Boat Company from 1894 down to 1902, and appeared innumerable times before committees of Congress and before boards appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, but has not been in the service of the company since 1903 (pages 83-84). After working several years, without getting any Government contract for submarines he consulted Gen. Eppa Hunton, of Virginia, then practicing law in Washington, who advised that the company should bring a submarine boat to Washington and exhibit to Congress, the Navy Department, and the War Department, so as to show its successful operation. For this advice General Hunton received $100, and so far as the evidence goes was not in any other way employed by the company or consulted about its business (page 86). The boat called the Holland was built in part with funds contributed by Mr. Frost, his father, his uncle, and his mother (page 86). Mr. Creedy says that "up to 1902, when I had control of the company, I am sure that no Member of Congress, no Government official, or anyone else was ever improperly paid a bill" (page 89). He also denies positively that the company, through any person, attempted to influence any Member of Congress who was on the Naval Affairs Committee (page 90), and that while he had control down to the end of 1902 "there was never any Member of Congress approached or anything of that kind"; also that no money was spent to defeat any Member of Congress, and that it would have been impossible without his knowledge, adding, "I do not think it was possible up to that time; I had full control" (page 90). He says: "We did not have to pay the newspaper men; they ran over us for news." "I never had occasion to pay them; there was no necessity" (page 95). Mr. Creedy further testifies that his present relations with the company are unfriendly, owing to a disagreement about fees. He has not been connected with it since 1903, and is now interested in a rival concern (page 93).

Mr. E. W. Creedy testified that he never had any official or business relations whatever with either the Holland or the Electric Boat Company.

Mr. F. P. B. Sands had a contract with the Holland Boat Company in 1896 which applied only to contracts with the Russian Government (page 107). "It has no application to any business in the United States, not the slightest, nor under any circumstances whatever, nor in any place have I ever approached or spoken to a Member of Congress or a Senator in respect of the interests or rights of this submarine boat." "My work related solely with Russia" (page 108). He secured the presence here of certain Russian officials who inspected the Holland boat at our navy-yard and secured contracts from the Russian Government for similar boats (page 108). He also succeeded in persuading Admiral Dewey and certain other naval officers to go down the Potomac and watch the performance of the Holland boat. He testified that his connection with the company ceased in 1904, "when I brought suit against it for fees claimed by me to be due." He has had no business connection with the company since and knows "not a word about what they are doing or intend to do" (page 115).

Dr. W. R. Kerr testified that he was never in the employ of the Holland Torpedo Boat Company or Electric Boat Company (pages 116-122); he was friendly with Vice-President Frost, but never received any compensation in any way directly or indirectly, as an agent or employee of the company (page 120); has not "followed the history of this torpedo-boat matter," "not for the last five years or so" (page 120), and "never spoke to any Member of Congress about submarine boats" (page 121).

Mr. Marion Butler, who retired from the United States Senate in 1901, and has since then been practicing law in Washington, was employed by the Electric Boat Company professionally about 1903. He or his firm, Butler & Vale, appear to have been consulting counsel for the company in Washington, but they have not appeared before any committee of Congress with reference to the company's business. He says: "I have not, and, as I have said, they decided not to on our advice. That is a thing we took up and advised them about when they wanted to employ us" (page 126). He testified that he never talked to a member of the House Naval Committee or any Member of Congress, and would have appeared before committees if he deemed it necessary to do so, but says: "I have thought that the best policy was to have competition to prove the best boat and that that was more powerful argument with the committees of Congress and with the Government than anything else, and my advice has been followed and I am gratified with it up to date" (page 129). He, or his firm, and Mr. McNeil are the only attorneys for the Electric Boat Company in Washington (page 131). He says the company does not keep a press bureau and has no newspaper men in its employ. "I do not know of a single one" (page 135). Replying to an inquiry as to the truth of Mr. Lillie's charge that the company has an organized lobby at Washington, Mr. Butler said: "I feel that the committee should indulge me to say that I want to here and now enter a most emphatic and earnest protest as a citizen against any man, a Member of Congress or not, stating such wild, irresponsible, and untrue charges without any foundation in fact to justify it" (page 135).

Referring to the House Naval Affairs Committee he said: "I have never spoken to a single member of that committee since I have been employed about submarine matters." He added that he did not know who had drawn the provision relating to submarines in the naval bill of 1908 (page 128). He also denied that he had prepared and drafted the Senate amendment to the appropriation bill of March 2, 1907, as charged by Mr. Lillie.

It should be borne in mind that Mr. Lillie's charge in this regard and also of the maintenance of an organized lobby, as submitted by him to the Committee on Rules, was prepared by the able and genial counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, after it had developed in the testimony that the Lake Company had in the present Congress impudently members of the present Naval Committee to offer amendments. The same learned counsel, in his testimony before this committee, said: "Mr. Chairman, on this matter of the propriety of any man interested in legislation in Congress seeing Members or drafting bills or asking an introduction, or that sort of thing, I would like to submit here a citation of the court of appeals (49 N. Y. Report, pp. 382 and 378). I think it is a splendid enunciation of the law upon that subject."

"It must be the right of every citizen who is interested in any proposed legislation to employ an agent for compensation payable to him, to draft his bill and explain it to any committee, or to any member of a committee, or of the legislature, fairly and openly, and ask to have it introduced; and contracts which do not provide for more, and services which do not go further, in our judgment, violate no principle of law or rule of public policy. (Earl, J., in Chesbrough v. Conover, 140 N. Y. 382, 387.)"

Mr. Charles S. McNeil was employed by the Electric Boat Company about three years ago. He attends mostly to its detail business with the Departments, particularly the Navy Department, in looking after the obtaining and carrying out of the provisions of its contracts for the construction of boats. Asked if he had "ever spent any money for this company at any time in any way intending by spending the money to influence or affect the judgment of any Member of Congress," he answered, "Absolutely none. I do not believe I gave even a cigar to any Member of the House or the Senate or any employee connected with it" (page 142). It appears from his testimony that when the Holland was brought to the Potomac in 1900 the company took guests down the river to a point where the water was deep enough to make tests. At that time he was not in the company's employ, but was a clerk in the office of Mr. Creedy, who represented the company. On that occasion a boat was used for the convenience of newspaper men. As the excursions occurred in the middle of the day, entertainment was provided, and on a later occasion, when another boat was brought here, there were similar excursions and entertainment. That was in 1900 and 1902. Those matters occurred, however, before his employment by the company, since which time he says he has never extended any official entertainment or given any entertainment, or tendered social hospitality of any kind, and never aided or assisted in creating any agency of the company in the Congressional district of any Member of Congress, and says: "I never heard of any such suggestion until I saw it in Mr. Lillie's charges" (page 143). He says: "We have no press agents; we have no newspaper men in our employ at all (page 147), and never paid anything to anybody for the publication of articles" (page 151).

Mr. McNeil testifies that he had paid Mr. Erly (who is a newspaper man) about $36 for preparing certain literary work (pages 150-152) and had paid Mr. Lord (who is also a newspaper man) $400 or $700 for literary work in the preparation of a series of articles (pages 150-153). These articles were not printed in any newspapers represented by Mr. Erly or Mr. Lord, and were not printed during any session of Congress. They were stories of a general nature—"feature stories"—concerning submarines. Having had read to him Mr. Lillie's charge that "under the guise of the employment of certain newspaper representatives for insignificant service, considerable sums have been paid to them by the Electric Boat Company, presumably for the purpose of securing their aid and assistance in coloring their newspaper reports in favor of the Electric Boat Company," Mr. McNeil said: "I state here under oath that that is untrue, and I defy anybody to present themselves here and show that it is true. It seems to me that that would be a proper time for me to answer the details of this matter, instead of answering some vague charge. I deny it under oath" (page 152). He testified that he spent no further sum of money for the company; never arranged any dinners for Members of Congress; did not stock the Dolphin with liquors and "never heard of it in my life."

Mr. Lawrence Spear had no connection with the company prior to 1902 (page 204). In that year he became naval constructor and is now also one of the vice-presidents of the company. It appears from his testimony that the Electric Boat Company has several manufacturing plants of its own in which it builds boats of various kinds, small craft, steam yachts, launches, electrical machinery, dynamos, etc. It employs from 250 to 400 men. It does not wholly construct its own submarine boats, but does about 25 per cent of the work, subletting the balance (page 240). Replying to the charge that the company had made an excessive and unjust profit of more than $1,000,000 on submarines, he said: "That is an outrageous and ridiculous misstatement, without a single iota of fact to support it and without a particle of truth in it. The facts of the matter are we have never received excessive profit on any submarines and on the last we have built we have not received any profit at all" (page 229). He testified that our Government is not paying more proportionately for submarines than is paid by other governments, and also that the price paid, or agreed to be paid, by the Government to the Lake Torpedo Boat Company in the contract which Mr. Lillie helped to secure, consummated only a few days before his resolution was introduced, the actual price is $90,000 higher than the highest price paid to the Electric Boat Company, and that reducing the two boats to the same required performance the Lake Company is getting about $70,000 more than its rival.

Mr. Spear denied that foreign governments are getting submarine torpedo boats at lower prices than our own, and upon this point said:

"A. . . . There are no excessive profits in it. Every government in Europe pays just as much, and the French Government, when they have enormous competition, where they have no profits to them, do not consider no development expenses, no trial expenses, and the cost of their vessels is as great as ours—the actual cost of building them. This Government gets a vessel of a certain tonnage and it is better than the corresponding French boat and it has not paid any more for it."

"Q. You say, then, that our boats are not costing more proportionately than the boats of other countries cost them?—A. They are not, sir. Other governments have never paid our company less for the same product."

Upon this point his testimony was subsequently corroborated by that of Mr. Flint, of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and Admiral Bowles.

Mr. Isaac L. Rice, president of the Electric Boat Company since its organization in 1899, testified that it is a New Jersey corporation, having its main office in the city of New York (page 424); that in addition to its submarine business it has also the electric launch business, the electro-dynamic business, and controls the Industrial Oxygen Company and has several plants (page 424). He is also president of the Holland Submarine Company, which still exists, but is not in active operation, as the Electric Boat Company now owns all the Holland patents and makes all the boats. Confronted with Mr. Lillie's charge "that continued and repeated efforts have been made by representatives of the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor to influence the action of officials of the Navy Department, and that such efforts in the past were so persistent and notorious as to call forth the condemnation and criticism of high officials of the Navy Department," Mr. Rice said: "The only influence we have ever used with the Navy Department is to build the best boat we knew how. The rest of that story is a malicious lie. There is no other word for it. There is nothing on record to substantiate any such talk as that, and Mr. Lillie has no information of that and nobody in the world has. I think, considering the amount of money we have expended in order to improve this boat and give the United States this method of defense, which we think very effective and very cheap—I think we have not been treated remarkably well by the Navy Department. I think that they have given preference to our competitors."

In answer to Mr. Lillie's charge that from 1893 to the present time the efforts of the Electric Boat Company and Holland Company have resulted in suppressing any possibility of competition in submarine construction and securing and awarding of contracts by legislation, Mr. Rice said: "That is so absolutely absurd that it sounds like ravings to me. . . . After we won out in the last competition, nevertheless, the Lake Boat Company got the contract for a boat, although it was so absolutely inferior that it could not be mentioned in the same breath" (pages 427-430). Concerning Mr. LILLEY's charge that "certain newspaper representatives had been subsidized and paid by the Electric Boat Company for favorable newspaper articles and reports in behalf of the said company," Mr. Rice said: "I can only say it is pure invention; there is not a word of truth in it" (page 430). Referring to the matter of entertainment of Members of Congress, Mr. Rice said that in 1900 and 1902, upon each of which occasions they had a boat in the Potomac River for exhibition or demonstration, entertainment was furnished to Senators, Members of the House, Department officials, and others, who were the company's guests upon those occasions, but that was the extent of the entertainment (page 431). Mr. LILLEY's charge that large sums of money had been contributed by the company, its officers, or agents, to campaign funds of Members of Congress who favored the Electric Boat Company's monopoly of submarine construction, and also that large sums of money had been spent to accomplish the defeat of members of the Naval Committee who had not favored that company, was read in extenso to Mr. Rice, who said: "That is a malicious lie. That is all I can say about it. Never a penny. The company never, to my knowledge, that I know, ever contributed one penny to any campaign fund of any Member of Congress or any one else. No, sir; nor for the defeat of any Member of Congress" (page 432).

The following also is from his testimony:

"Q. Mr. LILLEY further stated in that hearing before the Committee on Rules, and used this language: 'This Electric Boat Company has been a stench in the nostrils of the country for years, and in my opinion it has done more to corrupt legislation than all the other corporations on earth.'"

"A. Well, I think it is not my business to say anything here, excepting that as a citizen of the United States I think that is an attack on Congress and on the integrity of Congress rather than on us. How can we corrupt the incorruptible? The idea of all this is to injure us in our foreign business, to injure us here, to intimidate Members of Congress, that they dare not vote for our submarine boats, and then to create such an atmosphere in Europe that we can not compete with the Lake Company. That is the object. This atmosphere is being created all over Europe now."

In support of this statement he produced extracts from foreign newspapers, which articles, whether or not instigated by the Lake Company, as intimated by Mr. Rice, shows the lamentable extent to which this Congress and this country have been drawn into disrepute as the result of Mr. LILLEY's charges. A French paper, the Liberté, containing a dispatch purporting to have been sent from Washington February 21, under the heading "The American Navy—A scandal," refers to Mr. LILLEY's charges and says:

"The Naval Committee was firm for two battle ships instead of four and for eight submarines in place of four. It was rumored that these changes had been brought about by means essentially lucrative to the members of the committee."

The El Noroeste of February 27, 1908, says:

"Mr. LILLEY proved that the increase in the number of submarines and the decrease in the number of battle ships to have been due to the activities of a firm building the former class of vessels, which succeeded in purchasing the good will of the members of the committee. The occurrence consequently shows the grossest corruption and the great iniquity."

Another Spanish paper published in Madrid says, under date of February 25, 1908:

"Mr. LILLEY, the Congressional Representative for Connecticut, has shown that the reduction in the number of battle ships is due to the doings of a firm of submarine boat builders, which succeeded in bribing the members of the Naval Committee. Mr. LILLEY has moved the appointment of a Congressional commission to make an investigation of the facts in the case. The occurrence has made a painful impression in the United States."

The Berliner Tageblatt of March 13, 1908, contains the following:

"According to a dispatch from Washington, a Congressional inquiry is at the present time being held concerning the Electric Boat Company, on account of the accusation which has been made publicly, averring that the said company had bribed Members of Congress for the purpose of inducing them to support the purchase by the Government of submarine boats built by the Electric Boat Company and to influence legislation in that direction. Congressman LILLEY, who has been questioned by Congress as a witness, added the following deposition: 'I accuse the company to have made exorbitant profits, amounting to a million dollars, because the legislative body of the United States has given the inferior boats of the Electric Boat Company the preference over the superior boats built by other companies.'"

The Schlesische Zeitung, published at Breslau, February 22, 1908, contains the following:

"The following occurrence is reported from New York: In the House of Representatives Congressman LILLEY accused the Electric Boat Company and the Holland Submarine Company of having influenced by dishonest means the present as well as previous programmes for the building of ships for the United States Navy. According to the accusation made by the said Member of Congress the two aforesaid companies succeeded in inducing the House of Representatives to modify the present programme for the building of naval vessels in accordance with their wishes, in respect to the construction of submarine boats, notwithstanding most energetic opposition on the part of President Roosevelt, the Secretary of the Navy, and the naval experts. This is the second time that American firms have been accused of having exercised a corrupting influence on the House of Representatives in respect to Government supplies."

Concerning the charges, insinuations, and suggestions in these dispatches, Mr. Rice says:

"Absolutely false. You see Congress, I think, and the people of the United States have been made—I do not like to use the word—well, I will say have been attempted to be made the instrument of promoting an unsuccessful boat as against a successful one. That is the whole object of all of this. If Mr. LILLEY had been actuated only by upright motives, why did he wait until the appropriation bill had been voted upon by the committee? He says it has been a stench in the nostrils for years and years. Mr. LILLEY has been in Congress for years, and why did he wait? Mr. Lessler waited until an appropriation could be defeated and so did Mr. LILLEY."

Mr. LILLEY's charge in regard to applying for positions on the Naval Affairs Committee for new Members and assuming to have influence in securing their assignment, and also in regard to contributions to individuals and party campaign funds was read to this witness, who said: "It is absolutely false; that is all I can say about it. We never claimed to have any influence with the Speaker, and it is an outrage to say such a thing." About the second he said: "That we have contributed to campaign funds? * * * Absolutely false."

He also testified positively that no funds had been given to any officer or representative of the company for discretionary disbursement, and that no Member of Congress or official of the Navy Department has been at any time a stockholder in the company; that neither the company nor himself had any knowledge of the attempt of Mr. Ferry to influence any Congressman, and that Mr. Taylor nor Mr. Kellogg had no authority from the company to influence any Member of Congress; that no money was paid to any Member of Congress "not for submarine legislation or anything else" (page 461); that the company never employed Doctor Kerr or paid him money (page 464); that the fact that there was a Congressman from North Carolina on the Naval Committee had nothing to do with Mr. Marion Butler's employment, "not in the slightest degree; they are not of the same political party;" that the company had employed Mr. J. F. C. Archibald with reference to business in Venezuela and Peru, but "we never employed him for business in this country at all" (page 466).

Mr. Elihu B. Frost testified that he is vice-president and has general management of the Electric Boat Company (page 461). He employed Mr. Gordon chiefly with reference to matters coming up at the Navy Department; and Mr. Kellogg as a kind of "Ananias antidote," to correct matters in Connecticut, which he says "was the center of all the misstatements that came out about our boats." He asked Mr. Kellogg to satisfy himself as to the merits of his company's proposition and "whether he would not interest himself in it and correct some of the misinformation which was constantly coming from Connecticut and poisoning the ears, or minds, rather, of the Members from that State." So far as he knew the company had no attorneys in the districts of any members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the exception of Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Gordon. He had never paid for any newspaper advertising, except the expense accounts of Mr. McNeil, including the amounts paid Mr. Ely and Mr. Lord for literary work. He denied emphatically any knowledge of any contribution to any campaign, either Republican or Democratic, in any year, or any contribution to any Member or candidate for Congress, either Republican or Democratic, at any time. His denials upon these points were very full and explicit (page 503). He never requested, instructed, or directed Mr. Gordon to approach any Member of Congress with reference to legislation on the subject of submarines, and did not procure Mr. Ferry to interview Mr. LILLEY nor Mr. Taylor to go to Washington, to see him (page 506). He corroborated the testimony of other officers of the company that when, in 1900 and 1902, it had submarine boats here on exhibition it invited Congressmen, naval officers, newspaper men, and others to witness their exhibitions, and did provide entertainment for the trips necessary to witness such trials, which entertainment was common to all the guests. The trip usually occupied from 11 o'clock in the morning to 1 or 2 o'clock in the afternoon, covering the lunch hour, and the lunch was provided at the expense of the company (page 507). Also on two trips, to 100 persons, including Members of Congress, were taken to Annapolis to observe the operations of the Holland; there, but nothing of that kind has been done since 1902 (page 516). While in Washington he stopped at the New Willard Hotel and his total expenses charged to the company for the four years ending with 1906 averaged $1,800 a year (page 508); neither he nor his company spent any money to elect or defeat any Member of Congress in any Congress (page 509); he never paid or promised to pay any Member of Congress anything of value in connection with submarines (page 511); and he had not appeared before any committee of Congress since 1904 or 1905, and had never approached or argued with any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the present House with reference to framing legislation (page 520).

Mr. Norman G. Johnson, general counsel of the Electric Boat Company. With reference to the employment of Mr. Kellogg he said: "Our principal rival, the Lake Company, in Connecticut, and for the last five years Connecticut has been the seat, or rather the origin, of persistent rumors discrediting this company and its methods * * * and Mr. Kellogg was retained, as Mr. Frost specified, as a general counsel, to counteract, so far as he could by general argument and by stating the history of our company and our wares, the libelous things that were being said about us" (p. 728). At the time Mr. Gordon's appointment Mr. Johnson did not know Mr. Loud nor in what Congressional district he lived. He suggested Mr. Gordon's name to Mr. Frost. He testified that the company had no attorneys in Ohio, Maryland, Texas, Iowa, Oregon, or Missouri. It has one in Texas, but not in Mr. GREGG's district (p. 729). "I do not think during the last three or four years anybody has ever appeared for our company, either before the Naval Committee of the House or the Naval Committee of the Senate" (p. 730). He further says: "We do not do much now in that line at all. Originally we had to show our boat * * * so as to bring the merits of the boat to Congress. But of late years there has been very little legislative effort" (p. 731). Upon the subject of political contributions he said: "The company has never made a contribution of a cent, but I would say in this connection that from my long personal acquaintance with Mr. Frost and my long personal acquaintance with Mr. Rice, knowing both of those gentlemen, Mr. Frost for more than ten years and Mr. Rice ever since 1899, and in my capacity as general attorney of the company, I can state positively that there is absolutely no foundation for such a report or rumor" (p. 735). He said that none of the officers of the company had made contributions, except that he himself had, in response to a postal card request for a dollar contribution, contributed that amount to the Republican Congressional campaign committee, the same fund to which President Roosevelt also contributed $1. He denied emphatically that the company had attempted either to assist or defeat candidates for Congress; that it had no publicity department, or that it paid any bills of that character except "as has been disclosed by the testimony of two isolated cases," meaning the amounts paid by Mr. McNeil to Mr. Lord and Mr. Ely, as already shown. He said that expenses incurred in Washington are paid by check to the person incurring them." In all cases a memorandum is required to show the expenditures, but for the past four or five years expenditures had been very small, the largest item being Mr. Frost's, which averaged about $1,800 per annum. He denied that any person had ever been employed by the company for the purpose of "lobbying."

Mr. Maurice Barnett, secretary and treasurer of the Electric Boat Company corroborated the statements of the other officers. The following extract is taken from his testimony:

"Q. Mr. Barnett, it has been stated before this committee by a witness, Mr. LILLEY, as follows:

"I also became advised of prevailing and persistent rumors that the Electric Boat Company had contributed in some Congressional districts represented by members of the Naval Committee to their campaign fund, and that it had contributed in one instance to the campaign fund of the opposing party in the Congressional district represented by a member of the Naval Committee.

"I will ask you to state whether or not that is true.—A. That is not true.

"Q. Is it true in any particular?—A. In no particular.

"Q. Do you state that from your knowledge as secretary and treasurer and director and any other relation you have in the company?—A. In every relation I bear to the company or officers of the company I know the statement is absolutely untrue; the company has never contributed in any way, shape, or form to the campaign funds, either for or against the election of any Congressman.

"Q. Upon another charge specifically made, which I bring to your attention, made also by Mr. LILLEY:

"I further state that the question as to whether or not contributions or expenditures have been made in these certain Congressional districts represented by members of the House Naval Committee can be shown by an examination of the officers of the Electric Boat Company, and the presentation of vouchers, checks, books, and check stubs, as well as accounts."

"I ask you what you say as to that?—A. My first statement is that an examination would not reveal such entries, because they do not exist; the disbursements have never been made, and therefore it would be an impossibility for them to be shown by an examination of the books of the company.

"Q. Then do I understand you to deny in the first place that any such contributions or payments have been made?—A. Deny absolutely and positively.

"Q. And in the second place you say, if I correctly understood you—I will ask you whether the vouchers, check books, check stubs, or accounts of your company will show any such expenditure?—A. They will not show any such expenditures."

Referring to other officers of the company he says: "They have never drawn any money without signifying the purpose for which it was drawn" (page 689).

"Q. Did the Electric Boat Company keep any books of accounts showing money paid by it to Mr. Isaac L. Rice, Mr. E. B. Frost, Mr. Norman G. Johnson, and other persons employed as attorneys or otherwise in its efforts made to secure legislative appropriation for submarines? If so, what books were they, how kept, who by, and in whose possession are they at the present time?—A. There was no money paid for such purposes" (page 670).

"Q. Then were there any books in which accounts of such money was kept?—A. No" (page 670).

Mr. Augustus Treadwell, Jr., assistant secretary and treasurer, was equally clear and explicit in his denials of Mr. LILLEY's charges. He declared that the company "keeps all the books such as are kept by any corporation," and that none of them had ever been destroyed. They do not show any such expenditures, as charged by Mr. LILLEY, because no such expenditures had ever been made. Speaking of campaign contributions, he said: "I am certain none have ever been made." He denied that he or Mr. Barnett, the treasurer, had ever signed any checks for any such purpose. Referring to the charge that the company, its officers, or agents had contributed to the campaign funds of Members of Congress who favored the Electric Boat Company he said: "I should say it is absolutely false." And to the charge that expenditures to accomplish the defeat of members of the Naval Committee not favoring the Electric Boat Company, he said: "It is absolutely false" (page 741). Again, upon the subject of campaign contributions, he said: "There has been no money paid, to my knowledge, and I believe it is absolutely false, because there has never been a cent paid." Replying again to a question involving the charge of contributing to campaign funds of an opposing party in a district of a member of the Naval Committee, he said: "I do desire to be understood as saying that no such payment has been made." And again, replying to a question as to where the vouchers, check-books, and accounts could be found, showing contributions of that kind, he said: "Nowhere; because I do not believe that they exist." "No, sir; I do not believe that they exist." "I mean to say that no such payments have ever been made, and consequently no necessity for such entries" (page 742). And again: "My answer to that is, as I firmly believe there have been no such payments made, there could be no such books." "If such expenditures existed they would." "Appear in the books, but as they never existed I do not see how they possibly could show it" (page 743). And again: "I firmly believe, in fact I know, not one single penny could be paid to anybody that does not appear on the books" (page 744).

Mr. William D. Gordon, of Midland, Mich., is and for the past eight years has been United States district attorney at Detroit, and has held other prominent political positions. In 1906 he had professional business in New York City in a matter in which Mr. Norman G. Johnson was interested. Mr. Johnson introduced him to his partner, Mr. Frost, vice-president of the Electric Boat Company, who retained Mr. Gordon professionally on or about March 7, 1906. Mr. Gordon testified that Mr. Frost "said that the company had considerable difficulty with the Department of the Navy—Navy Department—through some unwarranted hostility toward the company" (page 396). After asking him if he knew Assistant Secretary Newberry, of Michigan, he said he desired "to retain him (Mr. Gordon) as attorney for the company to look after the general business of the company to advise it from time to time and to appear before the Navy Department whenever I was called upon in the interests of the company" (page 390). He testified that Mr. Frost thought "there was some antagonism existing in the Navy Department that ought not to exist, and he mentioned the fact that Mr. Newberry was from Michigan and that I could present matters to Mr. Newberry from time to time and to the Secretary of the Navy himself in the interest of the company and that it might be beneficial to the company" (page 392). Mr. Gordon had conferences and presented matters to the Navy Department on several occasions (page 393). He also assisted in the preparation of the brief which was submitted to the Attorney-General of the United States on behalf of the Electric Boat Company, as testified by Mr. Marion Butler.

Mr. Frost was very much exercised about a rumor that the Secretary of the Navy was to give half of the $3,000,000 appropriation to the Lake Boat Company, and Mr. Gordon went to the Secretary of the Navy in that matter (page 416). He also took an active part in behalf of the Electric Boat Company before the Navy Department after the rendering of the opinion by the Attorney-General (page 395). He says that he talked with Mr. Loub in March, 1906. "I simply wanted to get his views, and he expressed them as being practically in accord with Admiral Dewey's. The subject was dropped there, and that is the only conversation I had with Colonel Loub relative to submarine boats" (page 419). He was never directed nor requested by officers of the Electric Boat Company to hold any conference with Mr. Loub, and it was never intimated to him, directly or indirectly, that as part of his employment he should confer with Mr. Loub concerning submarine legislation (p. 392). He never appeared before any committee or conferred with any Members of Congress concerning submarine legislation. "On the contrary, I told Mr. Frost that I did not care to do it; at the time he did not ask me to do it, as I remember. I think I volunteered the statement that I did not care to do anything that might be regarded as lobbying" (page 393). He testified that his name "has been mentioned by my friends as a candidate for Congress as early as 1886 and periodically since then; I was mentioned for governor of the State, lieutenant-governor, and all that kind of thing." Asked if he had ever been a candidate at all, he answered, "No, sir; I never have." He says that he has taken no part in political campaigns with a view to influencing Mr. Loub to be friendly to the Electric Boat Company (page 393), and that his political efforts had not been indicated, directed, or affected by his employment with the Electric Boat Company. "Not in the slightest degree." He does not know of any political action of the Electric Boat Company or its officers in any locality. "I know nothing at all about it."

"Q. Have they ever had conversations with you or given you any directions to interfere in any political contest concerning Representatives in Congress?—A. They have not" (p. 394).

He does not know of their assisting any Members of Congress or assisting in defeating any Members of Congress. "I have never heard anything of the sort until this investigation; on the contrary, I never saw anything in their conduct or heard anything said by any member of the company that was other than honorable and upright and straightforward" (p. 394). He has never appeared before any committee of Congress since his employment by the Electric Boat Company, and does not personally know and has never made an effort to find out how Mr. Loub voted on submarine legislation. He testified that it was not in the scope of his employment that he should know. He was in Washington February, 1906, for consultation with Mr. Frost, with reference to the attempt of the Lake Company to secure a contract for a part of the appropriation of the act of 1907. He did not do or say anything intended to affect the action of the Naval Affairs Committee with respect to submarines (p. 421). The following passage occurs in his testimony:

"Q. I will invite your attention to this statement:

"The story as it is being passed about the Capitol is that a prominent lawyer of the Tenth Michigan threatened to become a candidate for Congress against Mr. Loub, and that he agreed to keep out of it when Mr. Loub promised to be not hostile to the Holland submarine boat."

"Q. Did you catch that question?—A. Oh, yes.

"Q. Is that true or untrue?—A. It is absolutely untrue.

"Q. In all of its parts?—A. In all of its parts."

Some time in the latter part of November, 1907, before the organization of the present Congress, there was an interview in Washington between a young man named Clarkson, secretary to Congressman Honson, and Mr. Spear, and later a conversation by telephone between Captain Honson and Mr. Spear. There is some difficulty in reconciling the recollections of these three gentlemen as to just what was said. Captain Honson and Mr. Spear were in the Naval Academy at Annapolis together, have been in the naval service together, and have enjoyed friendly and cordial relations for more than twenty-two years, and they had recently met upon the Pacific coast. Mr. Spear, being in Washington, dropped a letter to Captain Honson, stating that he would like to see him. Captain Honson was ill at the time, and at his request his secretary had a telephonic communication with Mr. Spear at his hotel, and finally called upon him there, telling him that Captain Honson was not well enough to be seen. He then reported the interview to Captain Honson, whereupon there followed a telephonic communication between the latter and Mr. Spear. Captain Honson says, "He called up over the phone, and it was over the phone that he spoke to me directly." Again he says, "Q. Then he called you up by telephone?—A. Yes, sir" (page 64).

Mr. Clarkson, however, says, "He (Mr. Honson) was on a couch and I told him what Mr. Spear had said to me. He says, 'Call up Mr. Spear.' I called him up. I told him to wait a minute. Captain Honson wanted to speak with him, and Captain Honson said, 'Spear, what did you say about me?'" (page 325).

Mr. Spear also said in the course of his testimony, "The next thing was a telephone conversation between Mr. Honson and myself. Q. How did that come about?—A. I think Mr. Honson called me up" (page 214).

As to which called the other up is entirely unimportant. The discrepancy on this trivial point is referred to merely as possibly tending to show whose recollection as to the entire occurrence may be the more accurate. Captain Honson says that over the telephone Mr. Spear said substantially this: "That he understood I wanted to get on the Naval Committee and that his company would be able to help me; would have influence to bring that about if I stood right on submarines." "He said 'with the Speaker'" (page 64).

Mr. Spear's account of the interview is as follows:

"Q. Then, as to the result of that interview with him on the Pacific coast?—A. That convinced me, that result, that he favored a large number of submarines as compared with a small number, and I have seen nothing since that would lead me to think that he had changed his mind.

"Q. Then did you or not say to him if he stood right on submarines your company would be able to help him to get on the Naval Committee?—A. I did not, sir.

"Q. I read further from the testimony immediately following that which I did read:

"Q. Did he say influence with whom?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Whom did he say?—A. I would rather not tell that, sir, unless you insist.

"Q. We would like to have you state, Mr. Honson.—A. He said with the Speaker.

"A. No, sir.

"Q. What do you say as to that?—A. No reference was made to the Speaker except the reference I have told you about, which, in my recollection, occurred in the interview with his secretary, but I told him, 'Of course, I wish you to understand that if you get Mr. WILLIAMS's favorable recommendation that is all there is to it, the Speaker always acts on that, as far as I have ever heard.'

"Q. The only thing you said then to either Mr. Honson or his secretary about the Speaker was, if they secured the recommendation of Mr. WILLIAMS, in pursuance with the custom of the Speaker, he would undoubtedly appoint him?—A. That was it; yes, sir.

"Q. But you made neither of these men, nor did your company, any offers of influence or friendship of the Speaker?—A. No, sir. The only thing that could be construed into an offer of help at all was the offer I quoted to you, 'If there is anything I can say to help you I would be very glad to do it.'" (p. 216).

Spear further testified that he had no influence with the Speaker, did not know the Speaker, had never spoken to him in his life, never communicated with him nor had any communication from him, had never held out to anybody that either himself or the Electric Boat Company had in any way, shape, or manner any influence with the Speaker, and that the same was true as to Mr. WILLIAMS; that no officer, agent, or employee of his company ever did anything with Mr. WILLIAMS or the Speaker or anybody else to secure Mr. HOBSON a place on the committee, and that as to Captain HOBSON's views in the matter, "I was very much surprised that he had drawn these conclusions, which I think he drew by mixing up my conversation with him and my conversation with his secretary" (p. 218).

That there was some possible confusion would seem from Captain HOBSON's own testimony, in the course of which the following occurred:

"Q. Did he seem to understand how minority Members secured places on the committee?—A. I think he did. I do not remember whether it was to me or my secretary that he said that I would have to look out for Mr. WILLIAMS, but I can tell whether it was myself or my secretary by sending for the secretary; but it is immaterial, I think."

"Q. But the idea was that if you secured the support of Mr. WILLIAMS—A. That he would do the rest" (page 64).

Mr. CLARKSON says that in his interview with Mr. Spear the latter did speak of "both Mr. WILLIAMS and the SPEAKER." The accuracy of Captain HOBSON's recollection is perhaps further tested by his statement of the manner in which he did secure appointment upon the Naval Committee in the present Congress. He says: "I made an official application to Mr. WILLIAMS and to the SPEAKER, and I think that was all. I do not remember that I urged my case to the minority leader, and I do not know whether my friends did" (pages 65-66).

His secretary, Mr. CLARKSON, testifies that "he also got the indorsement of the Alabama delegation, indorsing, I think, to Mr. WILLIAMS for appointment on this committee" (page 336).

There is also abundant other evidence in the record that Captain HOBSON himself prepared the indorsement which at his request the other members of the Alabama delegation (save one who was absent) signed; that several members of the Alabama delegation did personally interview Mr. WILLIAMS in his behalf; that he, Mr. WILLIAMS, the minority leader, did in writing present the name of Captain HOBSON to the SPEAKER for such appointment, and upon that presentation by Mr. WILLIAMS, and upon that alone, he was appointed to that committee by the SPEAKER.

In every instance save one, which had no reference to the Naval Committee, the SPEAKER placed Democrats upon the committee in accordance with the recommendation of Mr. WILLIAMS, who, having received the Democratic nomination for the Speakership, became, in accordance with custom, the Democratic or "minority leader."

As all the parties to the interviews seem to have clearly understood that the appointment would be made upon the recommendation of the Democratic or "minority leader," it would have been, to say the least, an idle and foolish thing to proffer influence with the SPEAKER. In any event, no such influence was attempted. The interview, or telephonic communication, did not seem in any way to disturb the friendly and cordial relations between Captain HOBSON and Mr. Spear, for some six weeks later, at the Capitol, they had a friendly conversation concerning which Mr. Spear testified as follows:

"Q. Was any reference made in that meeting at the Capitol to the telephone conversation?—A. Not at all, not the slightest, and at the close of that conversation Mr. HOBSON volunteered the information that he thought the number of submarines ought to be double what the Secretary ordered."

"Q. That would make eight instead of four?—A. Yes, sir. I have in no way, shape, or form, then or at any other time, endeavored to influence Mr. HOBSON, acting as a member of the committee on submarine boats, or on any other matters pending before it."

"Q. Have you sought in any way to get him to favor one company's boats as against another company's boat?—A. I have not. The sole purpose of my conversation with Mr. HOBSON which referred to submarines I have stated to you, and it was purely voluntary on his part; have never even discussed with him the relative merits of different types. I have never discussed with him in any way, shape, or form, because I felt the company's record was quite sufficient to make his judgment coincide with mine. I did not consider there was any question about merit of the different types of boats. I did not consider that anybody with technical information would consider that there was any question about it" (page 218).

This testimony has not been disputed by anybody. It is, on the contrary, corroborated by Mr. CLARKSON, who was present part of the time; and he also, speaking of Captain HOBSON, says: "I have not ever heard him mention any boat except the boat, as I understand, made by the Holland boat people. He made a statement to me that they had a very good boat, and if they would employ the proper means and methods they would have no trouble about getting plenty of Government contracts, because they had a very good boat."

"Q. What did that refer to?—A. That occurred in a discussion of the Holland boat, as I understand. I asked him what kind of a boat that company made that the investigation was about. He said it was a very good boat" (page 339).

The incident above referred to, having been casually mentioned by Captain HOBSON to Mr. LILLEY, the latter made it in the authorized newspaper interview produced before the Committee on Rules the subject of the general charge, that "they have even gone so far as to find out what new Members of the House have applied for positions on the Naval Affairs Committee, and they have assumed to have influence in securing the assignment of Members on that committee" (page 12).

But before this committee he said:

"I do not charge and I do not believe the person in question could exercise any actual influence in procuring an appointment to the Naval Committee. I do say and I do believe that the purpose was to ingratiate the Electric Boat Company in the favor of the Member of the House without warrant, by this offer of pretended influence and to mislead said Member to believe, in case he were appointed, that he owed his appointment to the Electric Boat Company."

As Captain HOBSON testifies that both he and Mr. Spear understood that the appointment would be made upon the recommendation of the minority leader, it is difficult to see that there could have been any attempt on the part of Mr. Spear to hoodwink and delude his former comrade in the naval service into the belief that if accomplished it would be the result of influence of the Electric Boat Company with the Speaker. In any event there was no such influence attempted.

With the exception of Frank L. Edinborough (not an officer of the Electric Boat Company), this embraces the entire list of witnesses submitted by Mr. LILLEY as those whose testimony would support his charges. For the purpose of eliciting the truth, these witnesses were most thoroughly examined by members of your committee, their examination covering hundreds of pages, and there were also submitted to them hundreds of questions, presented for that purpose by Mr. LILLEY, over his own signature, but which questions, the later evidence shows, were prepared in the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. Two hundred and four such questions were propounded to Mr. Rice alone, and large numbers to other witnesses.

As the testimony of these witnesses did not sustain the charges of Mr. LILLEY, and your committee had by this time discovered that the Lake people were really back of the charges against the Electric Boat Company and back of the inquiry, it occurred to us that they might be able to furnish some evidence as to the conduct of their rival. We therefore thoroughly examined the officers, attorneys, and agents of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

The following is from the testimony of Mr. Simon Lake, president (page 1059):

"Q. You have been for some time in pretty hot rivalry or competition with the Electric Boat Company?—A. About fifteen years, I think."

"Q. I would like to ask you, assuming that in that competition you must have seen a good deal of the other boat company, whether you have any personal knowledge of any improper expenditures of any moneys by that company with reference to securing Congressional legislation?—A. No, sir; I have not."

"Q. State whether you have knowledge of any expenditure by the Electric Boat Company or its officers for the purpose of electing any particular Member of Congress?—A. No, sir; I have not."

"Q. Or the defeating of any Member of Congress or candidate for Congress?—A. No, sir; I have not."

"Q. Have you any knowledge of any such expenditure of money or any attempt at electing or defeating any particular Member of Congress by any of the officers of the Electric Boat Company?—A. No, sir."

"Q. Have you any knowledge of any attempt by any torpedo boat company to secure the election of any person as a Member of Congress?—A. No, sir."

"Q. Or to defeat any person in his attempt to secure his election to Congress?—A. No, sir."

"Q. It has been charged here by Mr. LILLEY, and this is his language: 'That it can be shown upon investigation that certain representatives of the leading newspapers have been subsidized and paid by the Electric Boat Company for favorable newspaper articles and reports in favor of said company.' Have you any knowledge upon that point?—A. No personal knowledge; only what I have read in the testimony before the committee."

"Q. Have you any knowledge of such action on the part of any other torpedo boat company?—A. I have not."

"Q. Or any activity on the part of any torpedo boat company to secure the publication of newspaper or magazine articles favorable to its boats or unfavorable to the boats of any other company?—A. I can only speak for my own company. We have always published such matter as we thought was pertinent to the subject of submarines, whereby people could be enlightened in regard to the merits of our type of boat."

"Q. You have not considered it improper to state in newspaper or magazine articles the merits of your boat?—A. No, sir."

"Q. Or if in any particulars the other boat was inferior, you have not hesitated to say so?—A. We have not hesitated to give the facts as we understood them as to the merits or demerits of any type of submarine."

"Q. Do you know of any improper conduct on the part of the Electric Boat Company or its officers or of the Holland Boat Company or its officers in connection with either the securing of legislation by Congress or contracts from the Navy Department?—A. No, sir."

None of the other officers, agents, or attorneys of the Lake Company had any information upon the subject so far as their testimony disclosed.

Mr. Charles R. Flint, agent of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company for the sale of its submarines in other countries, testified that the prices paid the Electric Boat Company by the United States Government would not, in his judgment, afford an unjust profit, and that "these prices are not materially higher than the prices paid by European governments and they are not materially lower" (p. 141).

MR. LILLEY'S CHARGES AS TO EXCESSIVE COST OF SUBMARINES.

One of the principal subjects of criticism of naval affairs by Mr. LILLEY, and one of the charges filed by him before this committee, was that contained on page 32 of the hearings, as follows:

"I also submit as one of the facts influencing me to introduce my resolution that in my judgment under special and exclusive legislation the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor have already received from the United States an excessive profit of more than $1,000,000 for the construction of its submarines, and that under the proposed legislation now pending it will receive a profit of more than $1,000,000 in excess of what ought to be justly and fairly paid for the construction of submarines provided for, and that this fact can be substantiated by your committee by calling as witnesses the expert officials and constructors of the Navy Department."

This charge of excessive and corrupt profits was adhered to by Mr. LILLEY to his latest testimony before the committee (pp. 1608-1618). Such a serious and persistent charge requires careful consideration and investigation. The original resolution and the charges and hearing by Mr. LILLEY before the Committee on Rules, February 25, 1908, and his interview in the Washington Post, February 21, 1908, did not include this specific charge. It first appeared in his examination before this committee on March 12 (p. 32). Mr. LILLEY states that this charge can be proven by calling as witnesses the expert officials and constructors of the Navy Department. Concerning their qualifications to so testify he states as follows:

"Chief Constructor Capps, who I believe to be the best engineer in the world (p. 8).

"Those men are splendid, able naval officers (p. 1351).

"I believe they are the best there are in the world (p. 1353).

"I think Admiral Bowles has no superior as a constructor and business man (p. 1354).

"I desire that Admiral Bowles shall be summoned to testify as to these facts (p. 1308)."

It is to be considered at this point that nowhere does Mr. LILLEY attempt to prove by Capt. R. P. HOBSON, of Alabama, the fact that these charges and profits were corrupt and excessive; and throughout the testimony and proceedings concerning these charges Captain HOBSON appears to have been one of his friends and advisers, associated with him daily upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, both acting and working together upon many subjects of naval interest, and apparently they had some conferences together upon the subject of this investigation. It is conceded that Captain HOBSON is a naval officer of experience and ability in this particular line of work, and could greatly assist Mr. LILLEY in obtaining the facts as to excessive cost and profits, if he had been consulted and if such were found to have existed. No testimony by Captain HOBSON was offered before this committee upon this point and none was suggested by Mr. LILLEY.

The charges of excessive cost appeared before this committee substantially in the following manner: On the 13th day of February, 1908, F. B. Whitney, vice-president of one of the subsidiary Lake companies, prepared an article for a New York newspaper, elsewhere referred to in this report, in which he claimed that there were excessive profits and graft to the Electric Boat Company in the sum of $1,476,296.60, under the provisions of the item concerning submarines, in the naval appropriation bill which had been passed upon by the House Committee on Naval Affairs on the 10th day of February previously (p. 1783). These figures were based upon the testimony of Admiral Bowles, then Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, before the Committee on Naval Affairs in January, 1902, as it appears in these hearings, pages 353-354. Admiral Bowles is shown to have testified as follows:

"I was about to say that the cost of a submarine boat largely depends on the amount of experimentation which has to be done. That is certainly very expensive. Now, my calculations show that a reasonable cost, with a handsome profit to the contractor for the boats now building, would be $850.

"Of that I have allowed $11,100 for trials and tests. This price includes a fair percentage for the usual margin of general expense, such as are incurred in manufacturing work, but nothing more."

The testimony further shows, on page 355, that the boat referred to, then building, was of the so-called "Adder class" of 120-ton boats, submerged tonnage. The average cost per ton is thus calculated by dividing this aggregate cost of $89,459 by 120 tons, producing a result exactly of $745.494. By some process, apparently, known only to Mr. LILLEY and to those who employed the figures throughout these hearings, instead of using an actual calculation as a basis of the reasonable cost of boats of this class, they used instead the figures, as a basis cost per ton, of $745.45. These were entirely fictitious and arbitrary, had no basis of fact, and can not be calculated from any testimony of Admiral Bowles or of anybody else, so far as this committee is advised. Yet they appear to have been used by Mr. LILLEY, Whitney, Neff, and Webster, and all of the other witnesses who used such figures as a basis of cost per ton upon which to reckon a charge of excessive and corrupt profits (pp. 364, 1289, 1487, 1492, 1735).

The figures "of $1,476,296.60 graft appearing in the naval bill of 1908," as described in the newspaper articles and later in the anonymous letter, and later in resolution No. 264, introduced by Mr. LILLEY, and later as appearing in the testimony throughout these hearings, appear to be calculated in somewhat the same way. The loudspeaker amendment to the naval appropriation bill of 1908 provided for eight submarines of the type of the winner in the tests of May, 1907 (p. 423). The calculations upon this basis, to show excessive cost, appear upon page 355 of the hearings, as follows:

"Computing the excessive profit to the Electric Boat Company from the proposed legislation, as above quoted, on Admiral Bowles's figures, we have:

"Eight submarines of the Octopus type at a cost of $3,500,000, which means a unit cost of $437,500 for a 340-ton boat, or $1,286 per ton. Deducting from this proposed price the price per ton ($745) recommended by Admiral Bowles, who, as I have stated, is the builder of these boats, and it is seen that the Government would be paying an excessive profit of $541 per ton. In other words, the excessive profit on these eight boats of 340 tons each would be $1,471,520."

Another method of calculation is further shown by the preamble in House resolution 264, introduced by Mr. LILLEY on the 27th day of February, 1908 (p. 364):

"Whereas, first, the following statements have been published in the public press: 'It can be readily seen that the programme of the House committee at this session proposes to pay at least $1,286 per ton for the submarines, against a reasonable price named by Mr. Bowles of $745.45 per ton, or $1,476,296.60 more than the present builder said they were worth when he testified before the committee in 1902.'"

But none of these calculations produce the exact figures of $1,476,296.60, shown in the New York paper and as subsequently used by all the parties in the investigation as to the excessive cost, profit, and graft contained in the submarine item of the pending naval appropriation bill (pp. 364, 366, 1289, 1486, 1491, 1492, 1494, 1495, 1496, 1501, 1545, 1602, 1783, 1784).

No evidence appears before this committee and no calculation has been presented by which these figures can be ascertained. They seem to be entirely arbitrary and fictitious, have no basis for existence, and certainly do not show any definite thing as proven before this committee, so that whoever used them evidently received them from the person who first prepared or calculated them, and then put them before the public without knowing or realizing or caring whether or not they had any basis of fact. These figures next appear in the anonymous letter sent to Frank L. Edinborough, Bay City, Mich., on the 15th day of February, 1908 (p. 726).

They next appear in House resolution 264, introduced by Mr. LILLEY in the House of Representatives on the 27th day of February, 1908 (p. 364). Admiral Bowles testified (p. 1748) that his testimony of 1902 had been the subject of much discussion and controversy in the six years following it, but during all of that time and in all of the discussion he had never seen, heard, or known of this peculiar use or construction or calculation of either the $745.45 per ton as a basis for cost of submarines of the Adder type, or later the peculiar amount of $1,476,296 excess cost of submarines provided in the naval bill of this year. The only other figures relating to excessive cost appearing in the testimony are the general ones concerning undue profits or excessive charges in past contracts of $1,000,000 (pp. 43-45, 241, 278-280, 295-296, 445, 1100-1101, 1602).

But no testimony was adduced to show any connection of these figures with the actual facts. No calculation is put into the record as a basis for the use of these figures, and no testimony from any source was presented, showing that these figures had any relation at all to either the cost as provided by the contract or the profits accru-ing to the contractors. But on the contrary, the testimony of Secretary Metcalf, Admiral Capps, and Admiral Bowles was all to the effect that no such excessive profits could have been possible under the severe contracts, methods, and tests of the Navy Department (pp. 280, 297, 1743).

It is next important to ascertain whether the testimony of Admiral Bowles before the House committee, of January, 1902, was an accurate and proper basis in the consideration, by this committee or any other committee, in trying to ascertain whether or not excessive or corrupt profits had been extorted by the Electric Boat Company from the United States Government during the past years and in past contracts, or is attempted to be extorted by the provisions of the present bill.

Admiral Bowles stated that he and Admiral O'Neill and Admiral Melville sought to prepare figures which would give them an approximate idea of what would be the fair commercial value of a boat of that type. The boats had not been completed and neither of those officials had ever had any practical knowledge or experience in constructing them (pp. 1734, 1745). The manner of calculation was to take the total weight of the boat, dry, and divide it into groups of materials of a similar commercial character; then assume for each group a price per pound, and in that way a fair commercial market value of the material could be made (p. 1734). Admiral Bowles stated that any estimate of value per ton is very erroneous and must not be understood to be correct, and can only be a rough approximation (p. 1735). In making any estimate of the cost or value per ton, consideration should be had to the type of the vessel, its method of construction, the kind of materials, workmanship, cost of assembling, and many other details which can not be fairly presumed unless the boats are exactly of the same type and built upon the same standards (pp. 291, 296, 304).

Other witnesses corroborated this statement that the cost and value per ton of a vessel of this class is entirely misleading.

Spear (p. 229).

Simon Lake (p. 1000).

Flint (p. 1440).

Admiral Bowles also showed that other corrections should be made to his testimony of 1902 in order to obtain a fairly accurate result at the present time. First, the tonnage of the Adder in the calculations of Whitney, Mr. LILLEY, et al. is reckoned at 120, which is the submerged tonnage of the boat with the tanks full of water (p. 1735). The estimate of Admiral Bowles was made solely upon the dry weight of the materials used in the construction, which would be about 20 tons less. The divisor thus should be 100 instead of 120 tons (p. 1735).

Second, next, labor and materials would cost between 10 and 20 per cent more now than they did at the time the calculation was made (p. 1735).

Third, The Adder was built of commercial materials and subject to commercial inspection and not subject to Government tests. Vessels now are built on Government specifications and tests, which cost about 20 per cent more on an average than when constructed on a commercial basis (p. 1736).

Fourth, The cost of tests and trials at the time the Adder was constructed was comparatively small as against the cost of the tests required now. It is estimated that about 8 per cent of the total cost is required for experiments and trials under the requirements of the Navy Department at the present time (p. 1735).

Fifth, This estimate does not include the expenses of incidentals, officers, administration, general shop, and power and patents (pp. 1733, 1745).

Adding these various items to the basic cost obtained from previous figures of $745.494, it would thus appear that at the present time the approximate cost would be about $1,240 per ton (p. 1737). That approximates the cost of vessels under the latest contracts (pp. 313, 1090, 1449).

Admiral Bowles further testified that there was no profit in the construction of the Octopus, and that it really represented a loss to the Electric Boat Company (pp. 1733, 1743); that his company was interested in the financial result of the Octopus, and so expenses were kept down to the closest margin, and he knew the details of cost, and that it really represents a loss to those constructing it (p. 1743). This is the substance of the testimony of Admiral Bowles, whom Mr. LILLEY stated was the ablest constructor in the country (p. 1355); that he was a superior business man (p. 1354), and that he desired him to be summoned to show the facts and charges as to excessive cost (p. 1368).

The testimony of Admiral Bowles as to excessive cost is sustained by Secretary Metcalf, who testified as follows (p. 280):

"A. If the Department had even felt that the company was asking an exorbitant price for these boats it would not have let the contract, but waited until the next session of Congress and then reported the facts to Congress."

Mr. Simon Lake testified on the question of cost as follows (p. 1089):

"This present boat would cost from $50,000 to $75,000 more than we could put it out six years ago."

This would be from 15 to 20 per cent more than the cost at the time that the figures of Admiral Bowles first appeared.

Mr. Charles R. Flint, who has had large experience in the sale of submarine boats to foreign governments, testified as follows (p. 1449):

"Q. Perhaps gave you the figures incorrectly. I have not before me page 299 of our hearings, in which it appears in the testimony of Admiral Capps that of the last seven boats contracted for and to be supplied by the Electric Boat Company four were at $285,000 each and three at $360,000 each. Now, having those figures in mind, would your answer be the same?—A. My answer is that these prices are not materially higher than the prices paid by European governments, and they are not materially lower."

"Q. Are they materially higher or lower than the prices paid by foreign governments for the boats of the Lake type?—A. No."

"Q. In your judgment are these prices you have stated now the comparison with foreign governments? I will ask you this question: Do you consider that at the figures I have mentioned they will yield an undue or unjust profit to the Electric Boat Company?—A. I am not competent to answer that question. I have not a sufficient detailed knowledge of the matter to answer that, but my general impression is that the profit is not an excessive profit, but I have not the technical knowledge that is obtainable so as to answer it specifically."

"Q. But your judgment is that the prices indicated would not afford an unjust profit?—A. That is my judgment."

This testimony should be considered in connection with the legislation and contracts under it for the past ten years. (See pp. 583, 584, Naval Yearbook, 1907.)

Mr. LILLEY based his charges of excessive and corrupt costs upon three classes of facts: First, the arbitrary and fictitious figures as used or created by Whitney and subsequently adopted by Neff, Webster, and himself without any personal investigation or calculation (pp. 1343, 1346, 1349); second, that the Secretaries of the Navy were men without experience in business matters, and did not remain in office long enough to become acquainted with such duties, or did not ascertain whether the Government was suffering from extortionate or excessive profit in prices of construction (pp. 1341, 1345, 1352, 1355); third, that the naval officers in charge of the various bureaus were not business men, had no business experience, and were by training unfitted to judge of fair prices in contracts (pp. 1351, 1352, 1354).

As to the first class of facts upon which such charges were based, that of arbitrary fictitious figures, the committee consider that such charge has no basis in fact, results from no calculation shown in the testimony, has been demonstrated to be false in fact, is based on false premises, did not contain the necessary items of cost of construction, and has not been used by anybody of official, professional, or technical standing or repute anywhere, though the alleged basis of them has been on record for more than six years. Furthermore, they first appeared to have been first prepared or used by a man who confessedly sent an anonymous letter, secretly designed to ruin a trusting friend, and were used by another young man who had no experience in any class of business, and particularly not in this business, and without knowledge or verification of them in any way.

Lastly, these fictitious figures were used by Mr. LILLEY himself without any personal knowledge or investigation as to the legislative history, policy, or course of action of the Navy Department concerning the matters which should be a basis for them (pp. 1549 et seq.), though at the beginning of the testimony he testified that he had personally familiarized himself with these facts (p. 25).

Mr. LILLEY never made any calculation, investigation, or verification as to either facts or figures, but used these arbitrary and fictitious figures without question (pp. 1343-1349). He did not inquire concerning them of his friend Captain Honson, who was in a position to correctly inform him about them. He requested naval officers to be examined and then refused to take their word (pp. 1341 et seq.); he demanded that Admiral Bowles testify as to these facts and then declared he would not believe his testimony (pp. 1354); he charged all the Secretaries of the Navy for more than fifteen years with incompetence approaching corruption (pp. 1352 et seq.), and all the heads of the Navy bureaus at the same time to be incapable and incompetent and unable to know what were fair prices and profits in construction (pp. 1354 et seq.).

It was called to his attention that the men who had filled the position of Secretary of the Navy during the past fifteen years had all been men of successful business attainments, of the highest character and private professional standing (p. 1355); and that the naval officers who had charge of this work were eminent in their profession, of the highest character and ability, and especially trained by the best education in the world to do this very work (pp. 1354-1355).

Mr. LILLEY admitted that he had voted for these past appropriations, and in the pending bill had voted for submarines to cost $3,500,000 (pp. 1357-1359).

Notwithstanding this conclusive array of facts against his contentions and the gross errors underlying and pervading his attempted proof, he yet insisted upon his original claims (p. 1360).

This perversity in face of demonstration to the contrary, and regardless of the damage it may do to the good name of the Navy and its officials in the eyes of the world (pp. 433-434), in the estimation of your committee completely discredits his faith in originally making such charges and subsequently on following them up before this committee.

Connected with the charge of excessive and undue profits is the charge of special and exclusive legislation by which excessive and corrupt profits were realized (p. 32); that appears in the testimony of Mr. LILLEY, and is as follows:

"I also submit as one of the facts influencing me to introduce my resolution that in my judgment under special and exclusive legislation the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor have already received from the United States an excessive profit of more than $1,000,000 for the construction of its submarines."

The legislation upon the subject speaks for itself, and has already been set forth in this report. There was competition under the act of 1896 and 1903, and the act of 1907 expressly provided by the act of 1903. The acts of 1906 and 1907, for which Mr. LILLEY voted (p. 1355) gave discretion to the Secretary of the Navy to make a contract with both the winner and the loser in the tests of May, 1907. The opinion of the Attorney-General settled that fact (p. 271), and Mr. LILLEY knew this in the summer of 1907 (p. 1502). From that time continually to the date of the filing of his resolution Mr. LILLEY knew that the Secretary of the Navy had the discretion and power to make any contracts which he saw fit, which complied with the requirements of the law and the tests of the Navy Department. Yet he swore that owing to special and exclusive contracts excessive profits of more than $1,000,000 had been paid by the United States (p. 34).

On this point he stated to the committee not only what he had every reason to know was false, and in spite of the fact that he had personally acted and solicited benefits for his friends upon the basis that the direct contrary to his statement was true (p. 1502). It is only necessary in this case to state the facts as Mr. LILLEY himself has testified, to show the insincerity and deliberate falseness of his position.

FINAL ANALYSIS OF MR. LILLEY'S MOTIVES AND CONNECTION WITH THE LAKE COMPANY PROPAGANDA.

Hon. GEORGE L. LILLEY was appointed on the Naval Affairs Committee in the latter part of 1905.

In his first written statement, submitted at the opening of the hearing before this committee, he makes the specific charge that "one of the facts influencing me to introduce my resolution is that in my judgment under special and exclusive legislation the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor have already received from the United States an excessive profit of more than $1,000,000 for the construction of its submarines" (p. 32).

He subsequently testified that he voted for the submarine appropriation of $1,000,000, provided for in the naval appropriation act of 1906, and for the provision in the act of 1907 increasing the appropriation of 1906 from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 (page 1357).

While he was on the stand several times during the course of the hearings, he nowhere explains the reasons that prompted him to vote in favor of the two bills providing for submarine appropriations during his service on that committee prior to the bill of this year, though he is persistent in his contention that he is and always has been opposed to submarines; and thus by his vote cast against his judgment he contributed to the "excessive profit" and, assisted in the enactment of this "special and exclusive legislation." We therefore have to look for the reasons from some other source. Before quoting the words of the witness who testified as to Mr. LILLEY's reasons for voting for these provisions, it may be proper to obtain Mr. LILLEY's opinion of the witness as well as the witness's opinion of Mr. LILLEY. When being cross-examined by the committee on Rules on his original resolution, Mr. LILLEY testified with regards to Mr. Franklin A. Taylor, of Waterbury, Conn., as follows:

"In the last Congress a large manufacturer from my town, an intimate friend, a man who would probably have as much influence with me as any man in my State, told me that he had the promise of a large order if I would vote for submarines" (page 7).

At a subsequent time appears from Mr. LILLEY's testimony:

"Q. You have known Mr. Taylor fairly well for some time?"

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. He is a man of standing in your community?"

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. He is a man whose reputation for proven veracity is good in your community."

"A. I think so" (page 1337).

Mr. Taylor testified that he supported Mr. LILLEY in a political way in his various candidacies for office in Connecticut and that he is supporting him at this time (pages 474 and 477).

Later on in his testimony Mr. Taylor says:

"I told him (Associated Press reporter) I had been friendly with Mr. LILLEY, and our relations had been most cordial, and that I had no doubt that the 'prominent manufacturer' which he named before the Rules Committee—that I was the man whom he referred to—and for that reason I did feel that I had influenced Mr. LILLEY to vote for a submarine boat, and I had very good reason for feeling so, because when he came home after the committee had voted he said to me: 'I voted "yes," Franklin, and your face was in front of me when I voted.' So I felt I had influenced Mr. LILLEY, and I had nothing to be ashamed of in it" (page 481).

Mr. Taylor, continuing his testimony, sums up his whole argument with Mr. LILLEY in behalf of his vote for submarines by reciting the fact that a great many manufacturers in Connecticut were interested in securing subcontracts for furnishing to the contractors engaged in building submarine boats for the Navy Department. He asserts that Mr. LILLEY had always been opposed to submarines from the beginning of his service on the Naval Committee (pages 482-483).

At a subsequent part of Mr. LILLEY's testimony he testified that he had heard the testimony of Mr. Taylor and had listened very closely to him while he was testifying. He confirms Mr. Taylor's testimony with reference to his vote, and admits that he had knowledge of the fact that Mr. Taylor was interested in his own behalf in securing his vote in behalf of submarines (page 1554).

He says that Mr. Taylor's conduct toward him with regard to obtaining his vote in behalf of submarines was not corrupt (page 1338); that it was not wrongful, and that he makes no complaint against the conduct of Mr. Taylor in approaching him on the subject (page 1570). Nowhere in the testimony is there to be found any other explanation of the vote of Mr. LILLEY in 1906 and 1907 except in the testimony of Mr. Taylor, and at no time while Mr. LILLEY was on the stand did he undertake to explain anything about the singular situation in which he found himself by his declaration of opposition to appropriations for submarine boats and his affirmative vote upon these appropriations. Mr. Taylor's standing in the community in which both he and Mr. LILLEY live, his prominence as a business man in that community, the good character given him by Mr. LILLEY as a man of standing and as a personal friend, must inevitably force the conclusion that he has given the true reasons for Mr. LILLEY's vote on the question of submarines. It is difficult to reconcile the declarations with the acts of Mr. LILLEY. Indeed, they can only be reconciled by considering the recklessness with which he makes all charges that are calculated to prove the particular thing he desires to prove at the particular moment. Or perhaps it can be reconciled through that convenience of his memory which will not permit him to remember anything not in keeping with the particular thing he desires to prove.

After the naval bill of 1907 had been passed with the provision for competition between boats owned by parties desirous of securing contracts under the $3,000,000 appropriation of that year, the special board and the Board on Construction of the Navy Department having unanimously decided in favor of the boat of the Electric Boat Company and against the boat of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and while the Secretary of the Navy was about to award a contract for eight submarine boats to the winner in the contest, the Electric Boat Company, Senator Thurston, the attorney of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, wrote the Secretary of the Navy, on June 29, 1907, requesting that the question of his discretion to award contracts to other than the winner in the test be referred to the Attorney-General (page 1050).

The Secretary of the Navy having referred the question of his discretion under the act to the Attorney-General, the Attorney-General decided that he had the discretion to do what the Lake Torpedo Boat Company sought to obtain from him; that is, to give it a contract under the act of 1907. This decision of the Attorney-General was rendered on the 30th of July, 1907. Shortly thereafter Neff, the Washington representative of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, arriving himself with a letter of Mr. J. C. Lake, vice-president of said company, went to Bridgeport, Conn., to see Mr. LILLEY. Not finding him there, and ascertaining that he would be in Waterbury, he immediately went from Bridgeport to Waterbury and there met Mr. LILLEY at his hotel. The letter of Mr. Lake solicited the support of Mr. LILLEY toward securing a contract with the Navy Department for his company (page 1310). But Neff did not find it necessary to deliver the letter; he simply informed Mr. LILLEY of the purpose of his visit and explained to him the situation at the Navy Department growing out of the decision of the Attorney-General (page 1311).

Neff, after discussing the matter with Mr. LILLEY at Waterbury, wrote the following telegram:

WATERBURY, CONN., August 10, 1907.

Hon. VICTOR H. METCALF:

Your favorable consideration interests my constituents Lake Company. See letter.

Mr. LILLEY signed this telegram, and the telegram was immediately sent to the Secretary (page 1503).

The following morning Mr. LILLEY wrote his first letter to Secretary Metcalf, heretofore quoted.

A copy of this letter was sent to the Secretary of the Navy at the Department and another copy was sent to the Secretary at Fount Springs, Cal., and a third copy was handed over to Neff, so that he might have evidence of the result of his efforts with Mr. LILLEY (page 1503).

On the 23d of September, 1907, Mr. LILLEY's second letter was sent to the Secretary, as heretofore quoted.

It is thus seen that Mr. LILLEY, having voted for both submarine propositions in the sessions of 1906 and 1907 at the solicitation of his friend, Mr. Franklin A. Taylor, having subscribed by his vote to the provision for the competitive test as provided in the act of 1907, no sooner had the opinion of the Attorney General been given than he shifted his position from a supporter of the provision in the interest of his friend Mr. Taylor to that of becoming very active in behalf of annulling, so far as he could, the action of Congress, and in securing for his constituent, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, part of the contract for the construction of submarine boats. It is a singular coincidence that while he was reported in the newspapers as charging the members of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House with being "traveling salesmen" for the Electric Boat Company, that he alone of all members of that committee appears as "soliciting" a contract, and that contract in the interest of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

On February 10, 1908, we find him voting for the provision appropriating $3,500,000 (p. 423), providing for the construction of additional submarine boats, so that, protesting all of the time that he is not in favor of submarine boats, declaring that they are worth very little as a weapon of defense, charging that "excessive profits" have heretofore been made, and "excessive profit" will hereafter be made, we find him on all occasions supporting every proposition in the Naval Committee in behalf of appropriations for the construction of submarines for the Navy. Mr. LILLEY has at no time while a witness before the select committee explained how he came to shift from his support, at the request of Mr. Taylor, of the Electric Boat Company, to the support at the Navy Department of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. We are driven to seek the reason for his change of heart from his conduct and his acts as they appear in the testimony. That he did shift his position is beyond question.

Mr. Robert G. Skerrett had been in the employ of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company until January of 1904, working for that company first for $75 a week and expenses, and later at a salary of $5,000 a year (p. 817).

Mr. Simon Lake, the president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, was in Europe and returned to the United States about the middle of December, 1907 (p. 1059). Upon his arrival in New York he visited Mr. Skerrett (p. 828).

Fred Brown Whitney, who had been secretary of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, left his position in 1904 to become the second vice-president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and remained in that position until May 19, 1906. In December of 1906 he was employed by Mr. Simon Lake to go to Europe, "but his employment was not on the part of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, but he was employed to look after matters for Mr. Simon Lake in connection with his submarine construction and other independent affairs in Europe, and that the submarine construction referred to has nothing whatever to do with submarine boats. He returned to the United States with Mr. Simon Lake in December of 1907. He is now the vice-president of the Lake Submarine Company, in which Mr. Simon Lake owns a controlling interest; that soon after his return to the United States in December, 1907, he recouped his own office in the Munsey Building, in the city of Washington, but having no typewriter in his office he did, from time to time, and for his own convenience and by the courtesy of A. R. Neff, go to the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company in the Colorado Building, in the city of Washington, to use one of the typewriters therein in the prosecution of his own work; he naturally took a deep personal interest in the efforts being made by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and by Mr. Simon Lake to secure from the Navy Department a contract for the construction of a submarine" (p. 1782).

These facts must be kept in mind in order to properly understand the movements of Mr. LILLEY and the officers and former employees of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, starting from the day on which the Naval Committee voted on the question of submarines, February 10, 1908.

Benjamin Webster, Mr. LILLEY's secretary, says he was instructed by Mr. LILLEY to draw up his resolution No. 255 on the 12th of February, 1908, or two days after the vote on submarines had been taken in the Naval Affairs Committee (page 1774). Mr. LILLEY confirms the testimony of his secretary and says that immediately after giving the instructions to draw up the resolution he left Washington on his way to Connecticut and stopped in New York on business (pages 1203 and 1346). The vote was taken in the Naval Committee on February 10, 1908. Immediately upon the adjournment of the committee, Mr. LILLEY and Neff met in the Marble Room of the Capitol and talked over the vote that had been taken in the committee on the question of submarine appropriation, and Mr. LILLEY remarked to Neff: "Our proposition lost out." That seems to be the beginning of great activity on the part of both Mr. LILLEY and the officers of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, including the two former employees, Whitney and Mr. Skerrett (page 1498).

Mr. Simon Lake had come to Washington, and he says: "I had to see Mr. LILLEY in Washington, as he was a member of the Naval Committee . . . and I found he had gone to Connecticut. I tried to reach him at Waterbury, but he was busy and I was not able to see him. He stated he would be up in New Haven the following day." He had a conversation with Mr. LILLEY on the subject of the provision in the naval bill of 1908 (page 1061). Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution of investigation February 20, 1908.

Now let us review the activity of Messrs. Simon Lake, Skerrett, Whitney, Neff, Thurston, Webster, and LILLEY between these dates, February 10 and 20. Whitney, at about the same time that Mr. LILLEY was instructing his secretary to draw up his resolution, wrote the anonymous letter to Mr. Carmichael of the Detroit Free Press and mailed it on that day. On the next day he wrote the statement to a representative of a New York daily paper, containing three or more typewritten sheets, and among other things containing the figures $1,476,296.60. On the 15th of February he wrote the Edinburghborough anonymous letter and mailed it to Senator Frank Edinburgh, Bay City, Mich., on the same day. This anonymous letter also contained the figures $1,476,296.60. All three of these communications were written by him on the Smith-Premier typewriter and on the L. C. Smith typewriter, both typewriters being in the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (page 1783).

Neff says: "I think I hunted and looked him up (Mr. LILLEY) after the Naval Committee had adjourned and asked him about the action of the committee. He told me that the matter had failed and said they had a pretty hot struggle in there, and said it was an executive session, and I did not discuss it any more with him. . . . Senator Thurston and I got together and we prepared to fight on the floor of the House, and we had the whole thing prepared, and we were to fight on the floor of the House for open competition on the fact that it was for the best interest of the United States Government to foster competition, and we were the competing company to bid for the business, and we felt confident that Congress would give us that opportunity; and my time after that was principally with Senator Thurston" (page 1201).

Mr. Simon Lake, who had gone from Washington to Connecticut, to see Mr. LILLEY, telephones Mr. Skerrett, a former employee of his company in New York, and secures from him the printing of a series of ten postal cards, advertising his boats, and on the same day that Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution in the House, February 20, 1908, the first of that series of postal cards is mailed to every Member of Congress in Washington and to the representatives of the various newspapers in Washington. On the next day, February 21, 1908, the second number of that series was mailed to Representatives in Congress and newspaper correspondents at Washington (page 836). On that day appeared Mr. LILLEY's authorized interview in the Washington Post.

Mr. Skerrett obtained the names of Members of Congress and newspaper correspondents from the Congressional Directory (page 837). These postal cards, while intended to advertise the Lake boat, were not signed by anyone and condemned the Holland boat. After the mailing of the second lot of the series, the balance of the cards printed were shipped to Mr. Simon Lake at Bridgeport and the sending of them was discontinued.

Mr. Simon Lake testifies: "And I immediately came down and made provision to start a propaganda of my own to see if I could not educate the Members of Congress up to a point of recognizing the merit of the Lake type of boat. First, we sent out a number of catalogues that I had prepared—I presume all you gentlemen have received them—called 'Submarine Torpedo Boats.' I think the next thing was these postal cards" (pages 1062-1064).

While these things were going on Mr. LILLEY met Representative BATES, of Pennsylvania, in the House restaurant at lunch time and showed him his resolution of investigation and said to Mr. BATES: "See what I am going to introduce in the House." And a day or two after the resolution was introduced he was walking with Mr. BATES in the corridor of the Capitol from the Naval Committee room of the House and was complaining of the provision in the appropriation bill with regard to submarine boats, and he remarked: "Of course, if the committee sees fit to change it before the bill comes up in the House, then I will withdraw my resolution" (page 1724).

Mr. LILLEY also saw Mr. SHERMAN, of New York, in the Republican cloakroom and showed him his resolution. He told Mr. SHERMAN in substance that "such a resolution would stir up a fuss," to which Mr. SHERMAN assented, and he said, in substance, "If the action of the committee could be moved so that the competition for submarine boats would be open to other competitors that he would not introduce the resolution," and he asked Mr. SHERMAN to see the other members of the Naval Committee that he might possibly induce them to change their action. This Mr. SHERMAN refused to do, saying "that the Naval Committee was supposedly conversant with the whole subject," and that he was not, and that he did not propose to approach them on a matter about which they knew more than he did (page 1725).

While on the witness stand before the select committee Mr. LILLEY admitted, in answer to questions propounded to him by the chairman of the committee, that he would not have introduced his resolution if the naval bill of this year had contained a proposition for a full, free, and open competition which met with Mr. LILLEY's approval (pages 1624 and 1625).

What was the object of the "propaganda" being conducted by Whitney through his anonymous communications to New York newspapers; through his anonymous letters to Senator Edinburgh, and through anonymous communications to Mr. Carmichael, a newspaper correspondent?

By Neff, acting in concert with and under the advice of Senator Thurston, Washington attorney for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, through his plans to have the submarine appropriation controversy transferred from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the floor of the House.

By Mr. Skerrett, apparently the press agent of the "propaganda," through the publication of post cards and their distribution to Members of Congress and to press representatives; throughout magazine articles in the Scientific American, Harper's Weekly, etc.

By Mr. Simon Lake, through post cards ordered through Mr. Skerrett and through elaborate circulars issued by him treating of his submarine boats, which circulars were sent to Members of Congress.

By Mr. LILLEY holding back his resolution to investigate the Electric Boat Company, through his representations to Mr. BATES, of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, and to Mr. SHERMAN, a member of the Committee on Rules.

Now, how explain the apparent concert of action between Mr. Simon Lake, Neff, and Senator Thurston, the most active officials of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company; Skerrett and Whitney, former employees of the said company, and Mr. LILLEY?

The letter of Senator Thurston, attorney for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, of date February 6, 1908, addressed to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in its concluding sentence, indicates:

"For these reasons, and others which we are prepared to present, we ask for a fair field and no favor—the same opportunity, if necessary, at our own risk, to compete for the construction of submarines. I once more respectfully request that an opportunity may be given us to be heard" (page 1054).

The Senator calls it "a fair field and no favor;" the others engaging in the "propaganda" call it "open competition."

Now, we are quite clear as to the interpretation of "fair field and no favor" and of "open competition" placed by these gentlemen on the submarine appropriation of the naval appropriation acts of 1906 and 1907. There a test was provided for. A contest was had. The Electric Boat Company won out in "open competition" with a "fair field and no favor," and yet all of the "propagandists" conceded that they were entitled, although losers in the contest, to one-half of the appropriation, or at least to a contract for one boat, and had actually secured a contract out of that appropriation. That was their interpretation of "a fair field and no favor" and "open competition."

Mr. LILLEY, on the night of the same day that his resolution, No. 255, was introduced in the House, February 20, gave an interview to the Washington Post, published the next day, February 21. This interview was declared by Mr. LILLEY to be the only authorized interview of the many published in different parts of the country as coming from him. In testifying as to the correctness of this report before the Committee on Rules of the House, he says:

"I am in favor of a square deal, and my resolution aims to bring that about" (page 12).

Mr. Skerrett, in both his articles appearing in Harper's Weekly and the one appearing in Scientific American, takes the position that the action of the committee has been to substitute eight submarines for two battle ships; in other words, that the Navy Department recommended four battle ships and four submarines, and that the committee reduced the number of battle ships by one-half and increased the submarines twofold, making two battle ships and eight submarines instead of four of each. (pages 497, 802, 804, 810).

Mr. LILLEY in his interview in the Washington Post, says: "The proposal of a Congressional investigation is an outgrowth of the refusal of the Naval Affairs Committee to follow the President's naval construction programme. The President personally backed the Navy Department in its request for authorization of the construction of four battle ships, ten torpedo-boat destroyers, four submarines, etc. The committee cut the battle ships to two and raised the submarines to eight (page 11).

"I point to the fact that the four battle ships recommended by the President were cut to two by the committee. Secretary of the Navy's plans for improved submarines was voted down. Instead, double the quantity asked for by the Government—eight in number—were provided, but they are to be of the old Octopus type" (page 11). Whitney, the personal attorney of Mr. Simon Lake, in his newspaper anonymous articles, makes the same charge. So that it will be seen that Mr. Skerrett, the former employee of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, in his magazine articles, Whitney in his newspaper articles, and Mr. LILLEY in his authorized interview in the Washington Post the night of the day he introduced his resolution, were all seeking to impress the country with the fact that there had been a substitution of submarines for battle ships, this despite the fact that not one of them was acquainted with the others, though all three were in touch with Mr. Simon Lake. They all seem to be acting with a common purpose, resting their position on identical grounds, and that is the more remarkable since what really occurred in the committee did not warrant any such conclusion. Mr. Foss, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee:

"Was there, or was there not, any connection, so far as the discussion and action of the committee was concerned, between the battle-ship proposition and the submarine proposition?"

"A. From my knowledge and observation there was absolutely none.

"I was present at every meeting.

"I heard all the discussion.

"I noted the votes" (page 1634).

Mr. ELLIS, a member of the committee, says:

"Did the vote upon the battle-ship proposition depend in any way upon the vote on the submarine proposition?"

"A. Not with me and no one else that I know of.

"Q. Was there any statement made or argument made that the four-battle-ship proposition should be divided in order to secure more submarines?"

"A. Oh, no; I never heard of any such a thing, not to my knowledge; certainly not in the open committee in hearings during any time I was present" (page 1630).

Mr. BATES, another member of the committee:

"Will you state whether or not at that time or in any of the discussions of the committee the question of battle ships and the question of submarines were discussed together, so that one depended in any way upon the other?"

"A. Absolutely not, not in my mind and so far as one man can know the mind of another, they did not have the slightest relation to each other in the consideration of the committee as a committee. They did not have the slightest relation to each other in the matter of determining how many we would recommend in the bill of one and how many we would recommend of the other. They came up at different hours. The battle-ship proposition was brought up on one day, and on account of the extended remarks of Brother HOBSON on the subject, he had some remarks to make on the subject, and we adjourned over to another meeting, so that that was pending from one time to another. The submarine question came up on a succeeding day, after we had voted on battle ships, and had no connection, so far as I am able to know the mind of another. I do not think in the mind of a single member of the committee. The fact of voting for a certain number of one vessel did not depend on the number of another.

"During the discussion of the number of battle ships no submarines were referred to in any manner, shape, or form. It was not thought of. I will say further, if you will allow me, that there were three things before the committee in making up the number of submarines we ordered. One was the power or recommendation of the Secretary and President, and the other was information that had come before the committee a few days before from the Secretary of the Navy that they had decided to send two submarines to Manila. The other was a letter from the Secretary of the Navy a few days before that, I think dated January 31, to the Senate in response to a resolution of inquiry of Senator ANKENY, of Washington, directing that an appropriation be made for the construction of boats for special use on the Washington coast and Puget Sound. These three things were in the minds of the committee in arriving at the number of eight as over four which had been recommended last November in the Secretary's annual report" (pages 1724 and 1725).

Mr. PADGETT, another member of the committee:

"The battle ship proposition was disposed of before we reached submarines.

"Q. Your vote then for the battle ships in that bill had no relation whatever to submarines?"

"A. None, whatever" (page 1727).

It is thus seen that both Mr. Skerrett in his solicitude in the interest of the Lake Company was advertising through magazine articles an absolutely false and misleading statement with regard to the manner in which the question of submarines and battle ships had been disposed of in the committee. It is also seen that Mr. LILLEY, who was present and had full knowledge of the falsity of that position, was occupying the same attitude toward the committee and giving publicity to this false charge and yet, strange to say, Mr. LILLEY was not acquainted with Mr. Skerrett nor Mr. Skerrett with Mr. LILLEY, but both were in touch with Mr. Simon Lake. There can be no accounting for their common position predicated upon an absolutely false premise, except it was due to the fact that each drew his inspiration from a common source. Each was advancing the Lake Torpedo Boat Company's interest without regard to the truth. Mr. LILLEY himself, in the face of his Washington Post interview, which he said, when appearing before the Committee on Rules, was authorized by him, admits that there was no connection between the battle ships and the submarine proposition (page 364). But this was not all of the "propaganda" that Mr. LILLEY was carrying on in his efforts to further the interests of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

On the 27th of February, 1908, he introduced House resolution No. 264 containing the figures $1,296,476.60, and when on the stand he was asked who had drawn the resolution and he could not say. He thought that either Neff, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company's Washington agent, or Webster, his secretary, had drawn it (p. 1488).

Webster was placed on the stand and he denied having drawn the resolution (p. 1488). Neff was placed on the stand and he admitted having drawn the resolution on his L. C. Smith typewriter in the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company (p. 1489). He said he had gathered the figures appearing in the document and the resolution from the New York Herald and other newspaper publications. He said he had drawn the resolution the day before it was introduced, the 26th of February (p. 1490). He said it had not been drawn prior to the 23d of February (p. 1492), and when his attention was called to the fact that the resolution first had been dated February 22 and that subsequently the "7" had been placed over the second figure "2" in "22" he was compelled to admit that he had drawn the resolution on or about the 26th of February, or the day on which Mr. LILLEY had introduced his resolution to investigate the Electric Boat Company (p. 1493).

Later on, in his testimony, he said that he had been advised by Whitney, he of the anonymous letter fame, to draw up this resolution in order to secure certain evidence which he thought he could secure from the Navy Department to assist the committee (p. 1494); that he was going to get some friend of his to introduce the resolution and at first did not think of Mr. LILLEY; that Whitney had called his attention to the figures appearing in the resolution, $1,476,296.60 (p. 1495). Mr. LILLEY, after hearing the testimony of Neff in regard to his resolution No. 264, and as to the time when it was drawn, admitted the correctness of that testimony (p. 1499).

He at first claimed to have introduced the resolution by request and then admitted he had introduced it on his responsibility as a Member (p. 1500). He finally admitted that he had introduced the resolution without ever having read it. The figures which had been prepared by Whitney and embodied in his memorandum to the New York paper, included in his anonymous letter to Edinborough, were included in Mr. LILLEY's resolution, No. 264. And yet the resolution itself was written on the same day on which Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution of investigation, and singular to say, Whitney did not know Mr. LILLEY, nor did Mr. LILLEY know Whitney, but both were in touch with Mr. Simon Lake.

Webster, Mr. LILLEY's secretary, wrote a forged letter to Edinborough, signing thereto the name of "Smith," the same person to whom Whitney had written the anonymous letter of February 15. He says he can not fix the date of the letter, but he said it was some time in March (page 1530). Neither Webster nor Mr. LILLEY are acquainted with Edinborough, and yet we find Mr. LILLEY's secretary writing the same person that Whitney had written to and in behalf of the same subject. Strange to say Mr. LILLEY nor Webster knew Edinborough nor Whitney, nor did these know Mr. LILLEY nor Webster, but they all were in touch with Neff. The contents of the letter are not made known to us. Mr. LILLEY claimed that he got the initials and address of Edinborough from a newspaper man whom he calls "Mr. Cameron." When Mr. Cameron is brought before the committee and contradicts this statement, Mr. LILLEY says that he is not the newspaper man who furnished him the information; then, that he can not recollect the name of the newspaper man he has in mind, though he states the newspaper man frequently came to his office, and he admits that Mr. Cameron was never in his office (pages 1529, 1530).

Edinborough was summoned before the committee. Immediately on his arrival at Washington he makes an appointment by telephone to meet Mr. LILLEY at his hotel (page 708). He called at Mr. LILLEY's hotel, produced the forged letter of Webster, signed with the name "Smith;" Mr. LILLEY recognizes the "Smith" letter at once as being written by his secretary, Webster. Edinborough leaves the letter with Mr. LILLEY, and Mr. LILLEY destroys the letter (page 1581). And yet Edinborough, placed on the stand the next day after his interview with Mr. LILLEY, testifies that he has received no communication on the subject of the investigation from Washington except the one on the postal telegraph blank written him by Whitney (page 709).

Mr. LILLEY testified that he did not know Neff.

"Q. Who was the man who asked you to submit the motion in committee?"

"A. He is a representative of the company here. I think his name is Neff or Neth.

"Q. Does he live in the city?"

"A. I think he lives in Pennsylvania. My impression is that he comes from Mr. BATES's district. I think he used to be Mr. BATES's secretary" (page 39).

Again:

"Q. Can you give us the name and address of Neff; you know how he spells his name?"

"A. It is either N-e-f-f or N-e-t-h. I don't know where he lives or what his initials are. I can tell you who would know. Congressman BATES would know; he was formerly his secretary, I believe" (page 61).

And yet Mr. LILLEY first met Neff as early as January, 1907, at Bridgeport, Conn. Neff took Mr. LILLEY down in the Lake boat at that time (page 1197). He had seen Mr. LILLEY and spoken to him on February 3 or 4 of this year. He had walked with Mr. LILLEY through the Capitol and had spoken to him of the Sperry bill for an appropriation of $3,000,000 for submarines (page 1180). He had had a conference a few days after his first interview with Mr. LILLEY with reference to securing Mr. LILLEY's introduction of an amendment to the naval appropriation bill of this year carrying the provisions of the Sperry bill (page 1182). He had spoken to him over the telephone from Bridgeport and afterwards met him at his hotel at Waterbury and had written and secured the signature of Mr. LILLEY to the telegram sent the Secretary of the Navy, and he had again met him the next day and had secured the writing of the letters to the Secretary of the Navy, copy of which he took along with him (page 1199). He had met him the afternoon of the day of the vote on the submarine proposition in the committee, February 10, 1908, at which time Mr. LILLEY had told him "Our proposition has lost out" (page 1199). He had met him at the Willard Hotel on the night of the 20th, the night of the day on which Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution of investigation, and suggested that Senator Thurston, attorney for the Lake Company, was willing to advise Mr. LILLEY (page 1201). He had written the statement dictated by Senator Thurston and presented by Mr. LILLEY to the Committee on Rules on the day of the hearing on that resolution. He had typewritten dictations from Senator Thurston of the statement which Mr. LILLEY had furnished to the select committee (page 1186). He had advised with him three or four times a week from the time Mr. LILLEY introduced his resolution of investigation.

Senator Thurston and Neff had written the questions propounded by Mr. LILLEY, signed by him, and submitted to this committee to be asked witnesses on the stand (p. 1186, etc.). Neff and Senator Thurston had prepared the subpoena duces tecum which Mr. LILLEY had prayed for (p. 1300). Senator Thurston had dictated and Neff had prepared statement furnished by Mr. LILLEY to the Committee on Rules and to the select committee (p. 1202, etc.). Senator Thurston had dictated and Neff had prepared letter of Mr. LILLEY, dated March 19, 1908 (pp. 350, etc., 1421).

And Mr. LILLEY admitted that these statements had been prepared by Senator Thurston and Neff (pp. 1575, 1576).

In fact, Mr. LILLEY was continually in touch with this representative of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and with that usual lack of frankness which is characteristic of all his evidence before both the Committee on Rules and the select committee, he not only pretended not to know anyone connected with the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, but sought to make it appear that his colleague, Mr. BATES, of the Naval Committee, could furnish the information as to Neff, whose name he pretended not to know even how to spell.

Fred Brown Whitney swears that he had reasons to believe at the time that he sent his anonymous communications, to wit, February 12, 13, and 15, that a resolution would be introduced in the House to investigate the Electric Boat Company; that he believes he sent certain documents, containing the figures $1,476,296.60, to Mr. LILLEY (p. 1784). We thus see a common purpose in acts of Messrs. Whitney, Neff, Thurston, Simon Lake, and Skerrett, and Mr. LILLEY's acts. We see the same plans maturing at the same time in the two camps, supposedly neither having knowledge of the existence of the other. We see continual conferences, legal advices, clerical work, exchange of figures, resolutions, magazine articles, and newspaper interviews, all predicated upon the same statements, and wherever a statement is false as emanating from one camp the same falsity appears as emanating from the other camp. Whitney says that Mr. LILLEY had voted against the Lake Torpedo Boat Company prior to 1908 (p. 1784). He says that he had reasons to believe that the resolution would be introduced at the time he was writing the anonymous letters, the first of which was written only two days after the vote had been taken in the committee and on the same day that Mr. LILLEY had directed his secretary to draw up his resolution of investigation.

There can be no doubt but that there was concert of action between Mr. LILLEY and the officers and friends of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company; that their purpose was a common purpose; that their object was to secure legislation to further the interests of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, despite the fact that that company had been defeated in the test which had been had between it and its competitor. But while these circumstances are sufficient to convince the impartial mind that there was concert of action, we find ample direct confirmation of the fact in the testimony and ample proof to join the efforts of Mr. LILLEY with those of the company. Mr. Taylor, Mr. LILLEY's personal and political friend, the man whom Mr. LILLEY certifies as being a man of character and veracity, testifies that he talked with Mr. LILLEY at the Elkin Hotel, Waterbury, and that Mr. LILLEY told him that he wanted the Lake people to get a square deal; that he wanted the Lake people to have a fair chance (page 475). Mr. LILLEY, on March 19, 1908, wrote a letter to your committee quoting the name of the Electric Boat Company and asking that "both sides" be heard. This letter was dictated by Senator Thurston, typewritten by Neff, signed and presented your committee by Mr. LILLEY (page 1475).

Neff explains the purpose of this letter:

"Q. And you must have had Mr. LILLEY's stationery?—A. Webster brought some over for that special purpose.
"Q. That date and those extracts from hearings before the House Naval Committee and the newspaper clippings were prepared by Mr. Webster and yourself, as I assume, and as the letter itself seems to state, for the purpose of getting before this committee the other side of the controversy—that is, as between the two companies. The letter starts out: 'Your committee has, I confess, somewhat to my surprise, permitted witnesses—both those who could by reason of expert knowledge know some of the construction, qualities, and cost of our present submarines, and also those who could have no possible expert or other knowledge as to the construction, performances, efficiency, and cost of these submarines—to give as part of their supposed testimony glowing accounts of the remarkable qualities of the Electric Boat Company's submarines; and having thus established the precedent, and in order that the question of the cost and efficiency of these boats may be presented on both sides, I submit the following:'
"Q. What did you mean by both sides?—A. Well, it looked as if they were making out your boats as not worth anything and that our side ought to be in there just as well as the other side. I wanted to show the cost of our boats, and also show that the prices for those boats were not in accord with the performances of their boats.
"Q. What you meant in that letter when you said 'both sides' had reference to the Lake Torpedo Boat Company on the one side and the Electric Boat Company on the other, and you thought they both ought to be in it?—A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And that is the reason of that letter and the data?—A. Yes, sir" (page 1497).

The testimony of Mr. Taylor, the letter of Mr. LILLEY, and Neff's explanation of Mr. LILLEY's letter are as conclusive as can be that Mr. LILLEY was at all times acting in behalf of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and that his sole purpose was to secure such action regardless of the merits of the boats, regardless of any contest heretofore had between the Lake boats and the Electric boats, to wit, recognition in the matter of contracts for the Lake torpedo boats.

THE ANONYMOUS ATTACKS UPON REPRESENTATIVE LOUD.

Representative LOUD's name was brought into this investigation by Mr. LILLEY in his first day's testimony. His suspicions of Mr. LOUD were indicated in the Washington Post article. He said that Mr. W. D. Gordon, an attorney living in Mr. LOUD's district, had been employed by the Electric Boat Company for the sole purpose of endeavoring to secure favorable action on the part of Representative LOUD for such legislation as the Electric Boat Company might desire. To substantiate this statement, as Mr. LILLEY said, he offered in evidence extracts from Michigan papers of February 21 and 22, 1908, with this observation, "So far as I am advised these public utterances of the press have never been questioned or denied" (page 30). A paragraph from one of these extracts reads: "The story as it is being passed about the Capitol is that a prominent lawyer of the Tenth Michigan District threatened to become a candidate for Congress against Mr. LOUD and that he agreed to keep out of it when Mr. LOUD promised not to be hostile to the Holland submarine boat" (pages 30-31).

The same article contains this paragraph:

"Frank L. Edinborough, of Bay City, former secretary to LOUD, and now a candidate against him for Congress, is suspected of furnishing LILLEY with some of the facts which he is so anxious to have brought out in the proposed investigation."

In the list of witnesses given to the committee by Mr. LILLEY on March 9, Edinborough's name appeared, with no suggestion as to who he was or what the nature of his evidence would be. He took the stand on April 2. It then appeared that he was formerly Mr. LOUD's secretary, and that he decided last January to be a candidate against Mr. LOUD for the nomination for Congress.

Edinborough's testimony is conspicuous for three things: Its lack of frankness, treachery to his old friend and employer, and one distinct, willful act of perjury. When Edinborough reached Washington on April 1 he brought with him two documents which he had received by mail from Washington—one an anonymous letter attacking Mr. LOUD, the other a forged letter written by Benjamin Webster, Mr. LILLEY's secretary. Webster had written the letter to Edinborough in the name of "Smith," asking for information that would help Mr. LILLEY in proving his charges against Mr. LOUD. Webster gave his own boarding house as the address to which he wished Edinborough to send a reply to Mr. Smith. When Edinborough reached Washington he arranged by telephone to call on Mr. LILLEY in the evening. At that interview he showed Mr. LILLEY the forged letter, which Mr. LILLEY recognized. Edinborough left the letter with Mr. LILLEY, and the latter destroyed it, so that it could not be produced in evidence when called for. The next morning Edinborough swore (p. 709) that he had received no communication of any kind from Washington bearing upon this investigation except the anonymous letter and some newspaper clippings.

This committee can not decide which was the most despicable act, Webster's, in writing the forged letter, Mr. LILLEY's, in destroying it, or Edinborough's, in swearing that he had never received it.

During this testimony Edinborough referred to an anonymous letter, which he delivered to the committee with apparent reluctance. It was written in type on a Postal telegraph blank, and inclosed in an envelope directed to Senator Frank Edinborough, in type, and postmarked Washington, February 15. He received it on the 17th.

Mr. LOUD voted for this $1,476,296.60 graft in the Naval Committee. There is a story in circulation that the Holland people got a prominent attorney to become a candidate against LOUD last time; that LOUD finally agreed to vote for the submarines upon deal that the attorney withdrew—that the attorney withdrew.

"Subscribe for New York Herald and Washington Post.

"LOUD can be defeated on this proposition alone by you.

"Watch CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

"Have your local papers play up proposition.

"Have them write LOUD for explanation and whether the withdrawal story is true."

This communication had for the committee a much greater significance than would attach to a mere vulgar, cowardly attack upon a public man. Though written five days before the LILLEY resolution was introduced, it hinted plainly at an investigation. It also contained the mysterious figures $1,476,296.60 which appeared in the public press the same day it was posted. As these were also the same figures that were used in the resolution (H. Res. 264) introduced by Mr. LILLEY on February 27, a week after he introduced his resolution for an investigation, it was clear that Mr. LILLEY and Edinborough derived their inspiration from a common source. To discover the author of this anonymous communication was therefore to discover the person who had deceived the public and Mr. LILLEY with fictitious figures of alleged excessive profits on the submarines sold to the United States, as well as to unmask the secret enemy who had attacked the honor and good name of Representative LOUD.

On April 3, Mr. Jesse L. Carmichael appeared before the committee and testified that he had received on February 3, 1908, an anonymous typewritten letter mailed at Washington the preceding day, of similar import to the one sent to Edinborough. It is as follows:

"A Congressman does not want to get what happened to Lessler. Here is a big story tip for what it is worth.

"The submarine people brought out a candidate—a prominent lawyer—against LOUD. He withdrew upon agreement of LOUD to vote for submarines.

"Frank Edinborough, Michigan State senator, former secretary to LOUD, knows details."

It seemed to the committee on closely inspecting these two anonymous communications that they were written on the same machine and composed by the same person. One member of the committee, on comparing those letters with numerous communications addressed to the committee over Mr. LILLEY's signature, was impressed by certain similarities in type and style of composition that characterized both sets of documents. The committee then submitted the letters and the typewritten communications which they had received to Mr. David N. Carvalho, of New York, an expert on questioned documents. After a thorough comparison he decided that the two letters and four pages of questions submitted to the committee and signed by Mr. LILLEY were all written on the same Smith Premier typewriter. In this opinion he was confirmed by Mr. William J. Kinsley, of New York, and Mr. Albert S. Osborn, of Rochester, N. Y. It had previously been admitted by Senator Thurston and Neff that the questions signed by Mr. LILLEY were dictated by Mr. Thurston and written by Neff on the Smith Premier typewriter in the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company in the Colorado Building. A few days after the conclusion of the experts' testimony the official stenographer of this committee made, in the presence of Neff, copies of the anonymous letters on the same paper as the originals, on the typewriter on which the LILLEY questions had been written.

The next day on the stand Neff conceded that no one could deny that the letters and questions were written on his machine. Suspicion of course rested upon all who used this machine as well as those who dictated to those who used it, including Mr. Simon Lake, Mr. J. C. Lake, Senator Thurston, Neff, Whitney and Webster, who had been helping Neff write out the questions for Mr. LILLEY, and Mr. LILLEY himself. All doubt as to the correctness of the experts' conclusion was removed when Senator Thurston produced before the committee the affidavit of F. B. Whitney, in which he confesses that he wrote letters attacking Representative LOUD, and furnished the fictitious figures to the press that were used by Neff and Mr. LILLEY.

It is characteristic of Mr. LILLEY's attitude toward the House and his colleagues through all these proceedings that when he learned his suspicions of Representative LOUD were groundless and were created by the secret attacks of an unscrupulous schemer, he has never up to the present time expressed his gratification at the removal of the cloud which hung over his colleague, or made to him any apology, or given any expression or manifestation of regret that he should have made an unwarranted attack upon the honor and good name of his fellow-Member.

As the affidavit of Whitney throws light on several subjects involved in this investigation, it is given in full:

"CITY OF WASHINGTON,

"District of Columbia, U. S. A., ss:

"Fred Brown Whitney, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is 34 years of age; that he is an attorney at law, a member of the bar of the State of Illinois, of the District of Columbia, and of the United States Supreme Court; that from about 1901 to early in 1904 he was clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives; that shortly thereafter he became second vice-president of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, of which Mr. Simon Lake was and still is the president, which position he retained until May 19, 1906, when he resigned and left the employ of said company, and has not been connected with or in the employ of said company since; that in December, 1906, he was employed by Mr. Simon Lake to go with him to Europe, but his employment was not on the part of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, but he was employed to look after matters for Mr. Simon Lake in connection with his submarine construction and other independent affairs in Europe, and that the submarine construction referred to has nothing whatsoever to do with submarine boats; that afterwards he made one trip to the United States, and, returning to Europe, remained there until he arrived in New York with Mr. Simon Lake in the latter part of December, 1907; that he is the vice-president of the Lake Submarine Company, in which Mr. Simon Lake owns a controlling interest, which is an entirely independent company, not engaged in submarine torpedo-boat construction, but was organized to engage in commercial and other enterprises connected with matters other than submarine torpedo construction; that soon after his return to the United States in December, 1907, he reoccupied his own office in the Munsey Building, in the city of Washington, but, having no typewriter in his office, he did from time to time and for his own convenience, and by the courtesy of A. R. Neff, go to the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, in the Colorado Building, in the city of Washington, to use one of the typewriters therein in the prosecution of his own work.

"That having been associated in an official way with the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, and then being associated with Mr. Simon Lake in the business affairs of the Lake Submarine Company, he naturally took a deep personal interest in the efforts being made by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and by Mr. Simon Lake to secure from the Navy Department a contract for the construction of a submarine, and also in the efforts which he understood were being made to secure, if possible, from Congress such legislation as would leave the disposition of any appropriation made for submarines to be expended under the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy without legislative restrictions that would prohibit the Lake Torpedo Boat Company from competing with the Electric Boat Company for submarine construction.

"That of his own initiative he undertook what appeared to him at the time to be not improper methods to have brought to the attention of Congress the methods which he had believed had been pursued by the Electric Boat Company in their endeavor to secure through Congressional action what might be termed exclusive legislation, which would shut out competition and prevent the Lake Torpedo Boat Company from competing in the United States for submarine torpedo-boat construction.

"That for the reasons last stated he did, on or about the 12th day of February, write the following undated and unsigned communication on a sheet of the New Willard Hotel note paper:

"For Mr. CARMICHAEL:

"A Congressman does not want to get what happened to Lessler, but here is a big story tip for what it is worth.

"The submarine people brought out a candidate, a prominent lawyer, against Loud. He withdrew upon agreement of Loud to vote for submarines.

"Frank Edinborough, Michigan State senator, formerly secretary to Loud, knows details."

"That he inclosed said communication in an envelope of the New Willard Hotel stationery and directed it, in typewriting, as follows: 'Detroit Free Press, Washington, D. C.' That he mailed said communication so directed at Washington on said 12th day of February, 1908.

"That on or about the 15th day of February, 1908, deponent wrote upon a Postal Telegraph blank the following undated and unsigned communication:

"LOUD voted for this $1,476,296.60 graft, in the Naval Committee. There is a story in circulation that the Holland people got a prominent attorney to become a candidate against LOUD last time; that LOUD finally agreed to vote for the submarines upon deal that the attorney withdrew. "That he inclosed said communication in a blank envelope and directed it, in typewriting, as follows: 'Senator Frank Edinborough, Bay City, Mich.' and mailed it in Washington on said 15th day of February, 1908.

"That said communications and the addresses on said envelopes were written by deponent upon the Smith-Premier typewriter in the office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, in room 606, in the Colorado Building, in the city of Washington.

"That on or about the 13th day of February, 1908, said deponent sent for a representative of a New York daily paper three or more typewritten sheets, containing among other statements the following paragraphs:

"It is our unanimous opinion that it is best to have the full quotations sent you printed, so that our friends can use naval opinions with Members as from newspaper authority.

"Memorandum showing lack of economy in submarine at proposed cost of $1,476,296.60 more than contractor testified they were worth.

"The committee thinks it necessary to get prominent officers' ideas and opinions before public, so that other newspapers will start editorial discussion of the problem that is far more serious than surface indications tell."

"That said typewritten statements were prepared by deponent and were written in part upon said Smith-Premier typewriter in the office aforesaid of the said Lake Torpedo Boat Company and in part upon the L. C. Smith typewriter in said office.

"That said deponent sent said communications and said statements to said newspapers, believing that Representative LOUD had voted for an exclusive appropriation for submarines of a certain type, but that he subsequently learned that Representative LOUD voted by letter for submarines without conditions, and he deeply regrets the wrong and injustice so done by him to Representative LOUD, who was innocent of all suspicions entertained by deponent concerning him.

"The deponent further says that neither Mr. Simon Lake nor counsel for the Lake Torpedo Boat Company knew that he had written any of said communications and that he had been endeavoring in that way to bring out facts connected with submarine-boat legislation until within a few days last past, and after the experts employed by the investigating committee of the House had testified as to the fact that the said first two communications had been written on the Smith-Premier typewriter in the said office of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company.

"Deponent says that when he sent said anonymous communications he had good reason to believe that a resolution would be introduced in the House of Representatives for an investigation of the methods of the Electric Boat Company and its predecessor, the Holland Boat Company.

"Deponent further says that he did send newspaper clippings to some members of the Naval Committee, and may have sent to Representative LILLEY, before the 20th day of February, 1908; that he had sent said communications, including the figures of alleged excessive cost of submarines, to wit, $1,476,296.60, which deponent attempted to compile from the testimony of Admiral Bowles given before the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives in 1902.

"Deponent further says that he has no personal knowledge from which he could give any evidence to sustain any of the charges of Representative LILLEY. I think that in the sessions of Naval Committee of 1906 Mr. LILLEY voted against the Lake Boat Company.

"Deponent further says that this affidavit is made at his own suggestion and of his own free will and accord, to be used as evidence by said investigating committee and spread upon its record, and is made by said deponent solely because he is ill and unable to appear before said committee pursuant of the subpoena directed to and served upon him pursuant to the order of said committee.

"And further deponent said not."

THE PRODUCTION OF BOOKS AND PAPERS.

The power of a select committee of one House of Congress to compel the testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers can not, of course, rise higher than the authority of the House itself, and that power must be found in the Constitution, either in express terms or by necessary implication.

"Neither House of Congress was constituted a part of any court of general jurisdiction, nor has it any history to which the exercise of such power can be traced. Its power must be sought alone in some express grant in the Constitution or be found necessary to carry into effect such powers as are there granted. (Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S., 168-169.)"

The right to exercise the power in question and to punish for contempt is limited to very few cases. Each House, acting separately, is by the Constitution expressly authorized to be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, to compel their attendance, in such manner and under such penalties as it may provide, to determine the rules of its proceedings, to punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, by a two-thirds vote, to expel a Member. Each House is also vested with certain power and authority in impeachment proceedings.

After enumerating these powers, Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, said:

"Whether the power of punishment in either House by fine or imprisonment goes beyond this or not, we are sure that no person can be punished for contumacy as a witness before either House, unless his testimony is required in the matter into which that House has jurisdiction to inquire, and we feel equally sure that neither of these bodies possesses the general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen."

It having been alleged that J. Cooke & Co., debtors of the United States, were interested in a so-called "real-estate pool" in Washington, a select committee of investigation was appointed, and later a subpoena duces tecum issued to Mr. Hallet Kilbourn requiring him to produce certain deeds, declarations of trust, printed papers, copies, drafts, vouchers, bank books, bank checks, stubs of checks, ledgers, blotters, daybooks, etc., that can or may afford any information or evidence relating to the said matters to be inquired of by said committee, belonging to you or subject to your control, either individually or as trustee, or as a member of the firm of Kilbourn & Latta."

Mr. Kilbourn having refused compliance the matter eventually reached the Supreme Court, where it was, as stated in the syllabus, decided that—

"There existed no power of Congress, or in either House thereof, on the allegation that an insolvent debtor of the United States was interested in a private business partnership, to investigate the affairs of that partnership, and consequently no authority to compel a witness to testify on the subject."

In the course of his opinion Mr. Justice Miller said (p. 195): "What was this committee charged to do? To inquire into the nature and history of the real-estate pool. How indefinite. What was the real-estate pool? Is it charged with any crime or offense? If so, the courts alone can punish the members of it. Is it charged with a fraud against the Government? Here, again, the courts, and they alone, can afford a remedy."

And again (p. 196):

We are of opinion, for these reasons, that the resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the investigation was in excess of the powers conferred on that body by the Constitution; that the committee, therefore, had no lawful authority to require Kilbourn to testify as a witness beyond what he voluntarily chose to tell; that the orders and resolutions of the House and the warrant of the Speaker under which Kilbourn was imprisoned are, in like manner, void for want of jurisdiction in that body, and that his imprisonment was without any lawful authority."

Under this ruling it is very clear that had a committee been appointed under House resolution No. 255, introduced by Mr. LILLEY, it would have been powerless. No witness could have been compelled to answer a single question or produce a paper, save by his own voluntary act. The resolution charged nothing, but proposed merely the appointment of a special committee "to investigate the conduct of the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey and their predecessor, the Holland Boat Company, respecting the methods employed by said companies in connection with past or proposed legislation before Congress." There was not even an allegation that there had been any conduct, and certainly none that it had been improper, and there was no reference whatever to the conduct of Members of the House with regard to legislation. Such an investigation would therefore have been entirely outside of and beyond the jurisdiction of the House itself, and, of course, beyond that of any committee of the House.

But, by newspaper interview and in his statement before the Committee on Rules, Mr. LILLEY did make very serious charges which led the Committee on Rules to bring forth a resolution of their own, No. 288, which, having been passed by the House, is the one under which this committee is now proceeding. That resolution sets forth the charges by Mr. LILLEY that the companies named "have been engaged in efforts to exert corrupting influence on certain Members of Congress in their legislative capacity and have, in fact, exerted such corrupting influence." The resolution charges this committee "to investigate the charges made by said General L. L. LILLEY of corrupt practices on the part of said companies and Members of Congress with respect to legislation."

The investigation of alleged corrupt conduct on the part of Members of the House in respect to legislation was clearly within the power of the House, and it is probable that the conduct of a private corporation in its dealings with Members of Congress in respect to legislation may also be the subject of investigation, under certain circumstances, or at least may be considered in an investigation of the conduct of Members themselves. Be that as it may, this appears to be the first case in which either branch of Congress has attempted by resolution specifically to investigate the affairs of a private corporation.

Representative LILLEY having demanded that subpoena duces tecum be issued to the officers of the Electric Boat Company, such subpoenas were made out in blank and delivered to him to be filled out as he thought proper to accomplish the desired purpose. They were made out, as it subsequently appeared, by the counsel of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and are, in terms, very sweeping. The one served upon Mr. Isaac L. Rice, president of the Electric Boat Company, reads as follows:

"The said Isaac L. Rice to bring with him all books of accounts, showing payments made to attorneys and employees for work performed or to be performed at Washington or in any Congressional district of the United States. Also all vouchers covering expenses of that character. Also all checks, check books, check stubs, showing all such checks issued for such employment. Also all vouchers and memoranda showing payments to Elihu B. Frost for expenses of every kind and character at Washington or elsewhere in promoting the interests of legislative enactments of appropriation and for the procurement of contracts. All books, records, vouchers, checks or check stubs, drafts, or other evidences of any money contributed by Isaac L. Rice personally to the campaign fund of any political party in the United States. Also certified list of all stockholders of the Electric Boat Company at the present time. Also certified list of all stockholders of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, as well as those who have ever at any time owned or held stock of either of those companies."

The others may not be considered, as Mr. Rice gathered the books of the company together in his own control and came to Washington. He did not refuse to produce them before the committee, but by such able counsel as Martin W. Littleton, esq., and John D. Lindsay, esq., presented argument in support of the proposition that the committee ought not to insist upon their production, no ground having been laid and neither the committee nor the House itself having authority to investigate the purely private books and papers of a private corporation in the absence of positive evidence that they contained anything relating to the conduct of Members, but, on the contrary, in the face of positive evidence that they did not.

It must be conceded that in any event the subpoena is altogether too broad. The evidence shows that the company operates several manufacturing plants and has several hundred employees. The demand to produce the books and documents showing payments to them "for work performed, or to be performed, in Washington or in any Congressional district of the United States" would include the services of attorneys in the trial of litigation and of mechanics engaged in boat building anywhere in the United States, all of which is clearly beyond the scope of this inquiry, and equally beyond the power of the House itself.

In other particulars the subpoena is too broad. What has this House or this committee to do with "the procurement of contracts," unless in some way the conduct of Members in regard to legislation is involved? It is true that a new subpoena might be issued or this one, limited in scope so as to call only for books, check stubs, vouchers, etc., showing payments to campaign funds for the election or defeat of Members of Congress, conditioned upon their agreement to vote for certain legislation, but all through the most thorough and exhaustive examination each and every one of the officers, agents, and attorneys of the company have sworn that there are no such books and papers to be produced because there were no such payments.

The question is whether, in the face of such positive and uncontradicted testimony, and in the absence of any specific charge pertaining to any particular year, or any particular Congress, or any particular Congressional district, or any particular campaign fund of any particular party, but merely upon indefinite and general charges shown to have been based entirely upon rumor, the committee is authorized to examine books, papers, and accounts relating to the private affairs of this private corporation merely for the purpose of determining whether or not in their testimony the officers have lied. If they have told the truth, there is nothing in their books and papers into which this committee or the House itself has authority to inquire.

In 1864, there having been made charges of corruption in the Senate in connection with the passage of the sugar schedule in the tariff bill, that body passed a resolution under which a select committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating and reporting, inter alia, "whether a Senator has been or is speculating in what is known as 'sugar stocks' during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate." Mr. Elverson R. Chapman, a member of a firm of stock brokers in New York, dealing in the stock of the American Sugar Refining Company, was asked whether his firm had, during certain months, bought or sold any sugar stocks for or in the interest of any United States Senator, and whether the said firm was at that time carrying any sugar stock for the benefit of any United States Senator. Mr. Chapman refused to answer either one way or the other. His refusal was certified to the district attorney of the District of Columbia under section 102 of the Revised Statutes, and he was thereupon indicted. Chief Justice Alvey, of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, in a very elaborate opinion, reported in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 278, page 822, sustained the indictment, holding that the case was entirely different from Kilbourn's case, and that the inquiry was within the power of the Senate and the question pertinent to the inquiry. The case finally reached the Supreme Court, where the unanimous opinion of that body was delivered by Chief Justice Fuller. After commenting upon the Kilbourn case and declaring the case at bar to be entirely different, because specific charges publicly made against Senators had been brought to the attention of the Senate, and that the subject-matter as affecting the Senate was within the jurisdiction of the Senate, he said:

"The questions were undoubtedly pertinent to the subject-matter of the inquiry. The resolutions directed the committee to inquire 'whether any Senator has been or is speculating in what are known as sugar stocks during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate.' What the Senate might or might not do upon the facts when ascertained we can not say, nor are we called upon to inquire whether such ventures might be defensible, as contended in argument, but it is plain that negative answers would have cleared that body of what the Senate regarded as offensive imputations, while affirmative answers might have led to further action on the part of the Senate within its constitutional powers."

Suppose, however, that Mr. Chapman, instead of standing mute, had answered and sworn positively that no Senator had at any time been speculating in stock through the medium of his firm; that he was not carrying any and not at any time carried any stock for any Senator; then the case of Chapman would have been like the present case of Rice, except that in the Chapman case there were specific and positive charges, while in the present case there is neither evidence nor specific charge. Had Mr. Chapman answered "no," would then the Senate have been justified in examining his books to ascertain whether or not he had lied? Such answer, it would seem, would have brought him within the ruling in Kilbourn's case and protected the private books and papers of his firm from examination.

The requirement of the books and papers seems to have been desired chiefly to prove payments to campaign funds. Prior to the passage of the act of 1907 there was no Federal law making such contributions illegal. That act makes it an offense to contribute to political funds for the election or defeat of Congressmen, and makes it an offense punishable, not by the House, but through the instrumentality of the proper court. It is conceivable, however, that in a proper case where there was a specific allegation that such contribution had affected the conduct of a Member of the House, testimony as to such contribution by a corporation might properly be demanded by the House, not for the punishment of the corporation, but as a basis of proper action against the Member. In this case there is no allegation that any Member has been corrupted, and there is positive evidence that no contribution whatever has been made, and that there are no books showing any payment of any character having a tendency to affect legislation.

Furthermore, the subpoena, like the charges of Mr. LILLEY, has no relation to any particular date or dates, but covers all time from the incorporation of the company to the present moment. There is no allegation anywhere that any candidate for a seat in the present House was either elected or defeated by the use of campaign funds contributed by this corporation. It may well be asked, What jurisdiction has this present House to inquire into allegations against Members of any preceding House? In 1875 the Committee on the Judiciary, in a report submitted by Mr. William F. Lynde, of Wisconsin, declared that—

"The committee are of the opinion that the House of Representatives has no authority to take jurisdiction of violations of law or offenses committed against a previous Congress. This is purely a legislative body and is entirely unsuited for the trial of crimes. The fifth section of the first article of the Constitution authorizes 'each House to determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member.' This power is evidently given to enable each House to exercise its constitutional function of legislation unobstructed. It can not vest in Congress a jurisdiction to try a Member for an offense committed before his election; for such offense a Member, like any other citizen, is amenable to the courts alone. Within four years after the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Constitution Humphrey Marshall, a Senator of the United States from Kentucky, was charged by the legislature of his State with the crime of perjury, and the memorial was transmitted by the governor to the Senate for its action. The committee to whom it was referred reported against the jurisdiction of the Senate."

In Hale v. Henkel (201 U. S., p. 43) the United States Supreme Court decided, as stated, that—

"A corporation is but an association of individuals with a distinct name and legal entity, and an organization itself as a collective body it waives no appropriate constitutional immunities, and although it can not refuse to produce its books and papers, it is entitled to immunity under the fourth amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures, and where an examination of its books is not authorized by an act of Congress a subpoena duces tecum requiring the production of practically all of its books and papers is as indefensible as a search warrant would be if couched in similar terms."

Subpoena duces tecum were, at the instance of this committee, served upon Mr. Simon Lake, president, and other officers of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, who thereupon placed themselves in the same position as the officers of the Electric Boat Company. Their counsel, who had prepared the subpoena duces tecum under which the Electric Boat Company's officers were required to produce their books and papers, now took the position that they could not be required to do so. He stated to the committee that he adopted the argument of counsel for the Electric Boat Company and considered it sound.

The fact that the Lake Company is not mentioned in the resolution of the House, under which this committee was appointed, does not affect the liability of its officers to testify and produce the books and papers of the corporation in the investigation of charges of corrupt conduct on the part of Members of the House. There is fully as much, if not more, reason to infer from the facts appearing upon the record in this case that the books of the Lake Company would show payments for the influencing of legislation as there is that the books of the Electric Boat Company should so show, but there is no positive, direct, specific, or tangible charge against either, and the officers of both companies have positively testified that they have made no such payments and consequently can not produce any books or papers showing such payment, because having been no such payments there can be no such books and papers.

Many authorities might be cited in addition to those herein mentioned, but they are sufficient to convince us that under all the facts of this case if we were to persist in our demands and positive refusals to comply being made the House should certify the fact to the district attorney of the District of Columbia under the law, the courts would not sustain an indictment against the officers of these corporations for failure to produce their books and papers.

It is perhaps not strange that the Electric Boat Company objected to the examination of its private books, papers, and accounts at the behest and upon subpoena prepared by its bitter rival, the Lake Torpedo Boat Company. Neither is it strange that the latter did object to an examination of its books, papers, and accounts which might result in disclosing the secrets of its private business to the public. But your committee was somewhat surprised when Mr. LILLEY, having demanded and insisted upon the production and examination of the books, papers, and accounts of others, should be the first to object to the authority of the committee to compel the production. This committee is charged with the investigation of the conduct of Members with reference to legislation. The adoption of the resolution itself, under which we are proceeding, was, in a sense, legislation. The passage of the naval appropriation bill was, of course, an act of legislation.

The pending inquiry of this committee touches legislation. It seems, therefore, to us that the conduct of Mr. LILLEY relating to these matters might be proper for investigation, and that he of all persons insisting upon an investigation into the acts of others should not seek immunity at his own. It appearing that he had been in correspondence with some officials of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company touching the matter, and that the company had inaugurated a "propaganda" to influence Members, we desired that correspondence or copies thereof. A newspaper published in his home town, and in which he or members of his family are financially interested, published articles making very serious charges against Members of the House in matters affecting or likely to affect legislation. It appeared in evidence that that newspaper had no Washington correspondent and that Mr. LILLEY had addressed at least one letter to the editor thereof. We desired a copy of that letter and of any other letter or letters which might have been written by him tending to shape the course of that newspaper in regard to Members of this House.

It developed also in evidence that a letter signed with his name, severely criticising and unjustly aspersing Members of the House, had been published in a newspaper, and that he, knowing such publication, had not disavowed the genuineness of the letter. After it had been in print for some thirty days he was asked concerning it and testified that it had been written by his secretary without his knowledge. His secretary testified that he had written the letter and had signed Mr. LILLEY's name thereto in accurate imitation of Mr. LILLEY's signature. He also admitted that he had written and signed Mr. LILLEY's name in a similar manner to twelve or fifteen other letters commenting upon and criticising this inquiry. A copy of the one letter which was published was produced from Mr. LILLEY's letter-press book. We desired copies of the others. If they were not written by Mr. LILLEY, and his name was affixed to them without his knowledge, we did not see that they constituted such private correspondence as to be immune from investigation. Instead of producing them, however, he, through his counsel, Senator Brown, made the very first argument against the authority of this committee.

Among other propositions he asserted that having used Mr. LILLEY as a witness it was not competent for the committee to attempt to impair his testimony, as upon cross-examination, by the production of his books and papers. If that argument of Mr. LILLEY's counsel is valid, it affords a clear defense for the officers of the two boat companies, the only purpose of the investigation of whose books could be to contradict their oral testimony.

We are not convinced by the arguments of Mr. LILLEY's counsel that Mr. LILLEY having waived the privileges of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, the compelling of the production of the documents above indicated would be so unreasonable as to violate either the letter or the spirit of the fourth amendment.

The committee suspended all further action with reference to the demand for these documents on account of Mr. LILLEY's health, which prevented his further attendance or examination before your committee.

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE.

The hearings before this committee began on March 9 and closed on April 30. Testimony was taken in Washington, New York, and New Orleans. The evidence, which is hereby submitted as part of this report, covers 2,000 pages. Many points of law and methods of procedure were subjects of difference of opinion among the members of the committee, but, after discussion and reflection, every step taken, every opinion rendered, and every decision made was the unanimous act of the committee.

After a careful examination and analysis of all the evidence and an exhaustive review of all the legal and parliamentary decisions bearing upon the questions involved, your committee unanimously find and report:

First. That House resolution 255, introduced by Mr. LILLEY, was an impotent resolution, and no evidence could have been compelled thereunder, and that this investigation required the adoption of House resolution 258 of the Committee on Rules, under which the inquiry has proceeded.

Second. That Mr. LILLEY's resolution was not introduced in good faith.

Third. That Mr. LILLEY had no information to justify his charges made before the Committee on Rules.

Fourth. That Mr. LILLEY acted in bad faith in making his charges before the Committee on Rules.

Fifth. That Mr. LILLEY acted in bad faith in stating before this committee that he had made no charge reflecting upon Members of the House before the Committee on Rules.

Sixth. That Mr. LILLEY allowed himself to be used as an instrument of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company in its rivalry and attack upon a competing company.

Seventh. That Mr. LILLEY's real object in introducing his resolution and making his charges was the same as the purpose of the "propaganda" of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, namely, the defeat of the clause in the Naval Committee's bill relating to submarines.

Eighth. That Mr. LILLEY acted in bad faith in concealing from your committee the real parties in interest who were behind this investigation and furnishing him with information and evidence.

Ninth. That the charge that the four battle-ship proposition was defeated by the adoption of the submarine clause in the Naval Committee's bill was false; that Mr. LILLEY, as a member of the Naval Committee, knew that the charge was false, and that he refused to maintain the charge before this committee.

Tenth. That Representative LOUD was made the object of anonymous charges that were without any foundation in fact.

Eleventh. That Mr. LILLEY violated his obligation as a Member of this House in formulating and urging before this committee the groundless charges against Representative LOUD.

[Applause.]

Twelfth. That Mr. LILLEY acted in contempt of this House in destroying the forged letter from Webster to Edinburgh instead of delivering it to this committee.

Thirteenth. That Mr. LILLEY violated his obligations as a Member of this House in permitting his clerk to send out letters in Mr. LILLEY's name reflecting upon the honor and integrity of Members of this House.

Fourteenth. That Mr. LILLEY acted in contempt of this House in not disavowing openly upon the floor of the House the letter to Goff, published over his signature, reflecting upon the honor and integrity of Members of this House.

Fifteenth. That no official of the Navy has been induced by the officers of the Electric Boat Company, or anyone else, to act in his official capacity from corrupt or improper motives.

Sixteenth. That Mr. LILLEY's charge of excessive profits in the submarine contracts was based on fictitious figures, composed by an agent of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company by a perversion of the testimony of Admiral Bowles in 1902.

Seventeenth. That the charge that an excessive profit in the submarine contracts was due to special and exclusive legislation in favor of one company was false, and Mr. LILLEY knew that the charge was false when he made it.

Eighteenth. That no representatives of the press have been bribed or corrupted by the Electric Boat Company.

Nineteenth. That no member of the Committee on Naval Affairs has been induced by the officers of the Electric Boat Company or anyone else to act in his official capacity from corrupt or improper motives.

Twentieth. That no Member of this House has been induced by the officers of the Electric Boat Company or anyone else to act in his official capacity from corrupt or improper motives.

Twenty-first. That the only two attorneys employed by the Electric Boat Company in the districts of members of the Naval Committee, and remote from the business of said company, did not exercise a corrupting influence upon either Mr. LILLEY or Mr. LOUD, in whose districts they lived.

Twenty-second. That no campaign or other contributions were made by the Electric Boat Company to any Member of this House or to any campaign committee or fund of any political party.

Twenty-third. That Mr. LILLEY has sworn repeatedly, including his last appearance before this committee, that he had no further suggestions, facts, or sources of information, and that he had withheld from the committee nothing that would tend to sustain his charges.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the select committee appointed under House resolution 288 to investigate charges made by GEORGE L. LILLEY, a Representative of the State of Connecticut, is hereby approved, and the conclusions of said committee are hereby adopted as the conclusions of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and that the said committee be discharged from further consideration of said charges.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, the Connecticut delegation, after conferring with each other and having been in telegraphic communication with Mr. LILLEY, do not propose to actively oppose the adoption of this report. The Connecticut delegation, however, will vote against its adoption. A service in this body in two Congresses has impressed at least one fact upon my mind, and that is the integrity of this House. In a service upon its committees and in attendance upon its sessions here I have been impressed with the fact that this House is above venal and improper influences, and it would take very positive and direct evidence for me to change that opinion.

I shall vote against adopting this report which has just been read, as will my colleagues from Connecticut. This, however, is not to be taken in any sense as disagreeing to the findings of this special committee, so far as the tenth paragraph and its conclusions are concerned. I do not in any sense wish to dissent from that part of its conclusions, so far as it affects the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD]. I am free to say, and it is but due me to say, that I freely here and now express my confidence in him as an able, honest, and just legislator, free from any suspicion of corruption, and I know that that is his reputation among his colleagues and Representatives, justly one which he may be well jealous of and anxious to see sustained and preserved. [Applause.]

Membership in this body carries obligations, not only to one's constituency and to the country, but to this body itself. I do not want to penalize an honest effort to get at any and all facts that may show either a conspiracy on the part of anyone outside or inside of this House to secure any advantage by questionable and improper motives seeking to influence the judgment and action of this House.

The charge has been made by my colleague that one the Electric Boat Company has received contracts from the Government for the construction of submarines, and has contracts now, and has been engaged in efforts to exert corrupting influences on the Members of this House. This was substantially the subject-matter of the investigation. My colleague honestly believed, as shown upon the record made up in the case and now before us, that it was his duty to bring about this investigation. I sincerely regret that on account of his physical condition he can not be present during the consideration of the motion to adopt this report. Upon the advice of his physician he has left the city to recover his health, broken as it has been by the demands of this investigation.

Those who know my colleague can not accept the findings of this committee that he was either guilty of bad faith, willfully and knowingly made any misstatements intended to deceive, or that he had any other than a proper and absolutely right motive in attempting to reach the ultimate truth of the subject-matter of this investigation. Certain facts were within the personal knowledge of the gentleman who brought about this investigation. The resolution under which the committee acted stated that these charges were preferred upon his responsibility as a Representative. The responsibility was surely upon my colleague, having been the mover of the resolution, but it is equally true that this responsibility shifted from him to this special committee when he indicated, as he did, how he wanted witnesses called and was prepared to furnish able counsel at his own expense to direct the presentation of the facts as he believed them capable of proof.

There can be no doubt of the right of the committee and its power to conduct the investigation in such manner as to them seemed fit. After the refusal of the committee to accept my colleague's suggestions as to the method of conducting the investigation, how and when witnesses should be called, then the committee relieved, it seems to me, Mr. LILLEY of further responsibility and assumed it themselves. The record discloses that the issue was clouded with much that is immaterial and irrelevant. The committee was appointed to investigate a certain corporation and its relation to legislation. Still, sixteen of the twenty-three conclusions of the committee are devoted to the mover of the resolution, and I for one can not accept those conclusions as true. It is not fair to construe technical and parliamentary defects as evidence of bad faith. My candid judgment, based upon a long acquaintance with my colleague, is that this report does not represent his attitude toward this subject-matter or the House. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, by telegraphic request of my colleague, Mr. LILLEY, not to antagonize the report of the committee, I refrain from so doing, but I feel it my duty to express my confidence in his integrity and sincerity of purpose, and shall vote "no" on this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to do more than to explain why I can not vote for this motion. I do not attack the great committee that has made this report. I do not undertake to say whether all its findings are justified or not. I have not read or heard even the whole of the report. I have read substantially nothing from the above 1,800 printed pages of testimony, but I am not prepared to condemn anybody by my vote when I am not fully advised. The report, so far as I have examined it, is a brief against Mr. LILLEY, first, because he made the charges; second, because he was a witness, and the findings are substantially all against him and not against or in favor particularly of anybody that was charged with something in his resolution.

The matter referred to this committee had no relation to charges against Mr. LILLEY, and the result of the findings are all against him. I read from the first page of the report, being a portion of the resolution authorizing the Speaker to appoint the investigating committee:

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed to investigate the charges made by the said George L. LILLEY of corrupt practices on the part of said company and Members of Congress with respect to legislation, and that said committee shall have authority to send for persons and to take testimony, etc.

The findings are many in number and are not confined in any sense to the resolution or the charges the committee was appointed to investigate, but are findings against Mr. LILLEY as the man who made the charges, and who was only a witness. In so far, Mr. Speaker, as it was necessary to weigh the effect of any testimony, whatever it was, of Mr. LILLEY, the committee had a right to comment upon his conduct, but when that was through, it could only be done for the purpose of showing its bearings upon the real charges referred to the committee, unless it found him guilty as a Member of this House "of corrupt practices," and I can not vote for the motion for the reason that it had no jurisdiction to investigate him or his motives otherwise than I have just stated. We are not called on here to do anything with reference to Mr. LILLEY, and if he has been guilty—and he may have been, so far as I know, for I am not familiar enough with the testimony to pass upon the question and must accept, in a large sense, the report of the committee—if he has been guilty of anything, let him be charged with it and investigated, and let him be heard. I know of no man so humble in life in this country that he is not entitled to a hearing before being condemned. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, no one else has asked me for any time. I do not know whether any gentleman desires any time. If not, I have but one word to say. Mr. Speaker, I have kept in touch with the evidence as it was taken by the committee, from the copies that were sent to me from time to time. I read carefully this report before it was brought into the House, and I think the committee was justified in making the able report they have made and in drawing the conclusions they have drawn from that report. Therefore I offer this resolution, and I now move the previous question upon its adoption.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman moves the previous question I will ask him to yield to me for a little while.

Mr. PAYNE. I withhold the motion, and will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield two minutes to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman yields to me, I would ask him to yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote against the resolution. I shall not attempt to enter into any discussion of the subject, but desire simply to read the following from the testimony taken before the committee and bearing upon the investigation. I read from the testimony of Mr. Lawrence Spear, contained on page 237 of the hearings. Mr. Spear is the vice-president of the Electric Boat Company:

Q. Would you say, then, that Representative Honson, when he voted on the Naval Committee for eight boats, that that action of his could be referred by any fair means to his interest in or relation to you, or as the result of any possible solicitation from you to him, or any promise from you to him of any benefit?—A. Certainly not, sir; certainly not.

Q. In view of the conflict between you, his testimony contrasted with yours on the matter of your interview on the subject, I will ask you if you and Representative Honson entered the Naval Academy in the same year?—A. No, sir; I entered the year after.

Q. You were then three years together?—A. We then were there three years together.

Q. And were in the same corps?—A. In the same corps afterwards.

Q. Both naval constructors?—A. We were, sir.

Q. Can you tell me the year he went out of the service of the United States?—A. It must have been 1902 or 1903.

Q. Can you tell me the year you went out?—A. 1902, sir.

Q. He quit the active service of the Navy and particularly the branch of naval construction to go into private life?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For his private business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you quit the active service of the Navy, the construction department, to go into private life, your private business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you derive from your careers in this time any reason for supposing that either of you have an advantage of the other for credibility?

Mr. Speaker, a credible witness testified to the accuracy of my statements as against those of Mr. Spear, though a member of the court in these questions parallels our credibility.

That is all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is, or is supposed to be, a free Government controlled and administered by the "representatives of the people." The representatives of the people are as a rule tolerably fair representatives of the people who send them here. If they are not, it is the fault of the people who send them here. If there is any breakdown in representative institutions, it is because the people themselves are incapable of self-government. If so, they are incapable of selecting wise, intelligent, and honest representatives. If so, they are likewise incapable of governing themselves wisely, honestly, and intelligently. The very worst form of treason to a Government like ours consists in corrupt practices upon the part of representatives of the people. Any man upon this floor who is guilty of corrupt practices, or would be, is an enemy to the American people themselves; not only an enemy, but a traitor to the American people. He is not a gentleman, because no gentleman betrays a trust. The very next worst possible form of treason to the American people is to stigmatize as being guilty of corrupt practices fellow-representatives of the people who are not guilty of them. [Applause.] I have no hesitancy in saying that any man who wantonly and without due cause—at least probable cause—accuses an elected representative of the people of the very highest possible form of treason under a free Government, to wit, corrupt practice, is himself so guilty that he ought not to be a member of this body, and this body ought to be purged of his association—unless he shows a reasonable ground for his charge.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, this committee—I will yield in a minute—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will in a second. This committee has brought in a resolution. The friends of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] who has been treated so leniently by the committee do not seem to appreciate the leniency of the committee. They do not seem to appreciate the fact that one of two things is true—and I quote the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEFFER] in reading the resolution containing the charge of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY]—"corrupt practices of Members." Either the charge of "corrupt practices upon the part of Members," as made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] is true or else upon the other ground the charge itself was absolutely false, wanton, and unprovoked. If the charge had been proven against a single Member of this House he ought to have been expelled from this body, and any Member who will make an unproven charge of this sort against a fellow Member ought to be expelled from this body [applause], unless he had a reasonable right to make it and probable cause to make it and shows his cause. In that event, he ought to be honored as a very hero in the front of American life. Gentlemen who are defending the gentleman from Connecticut do not seem to appreciate the leniency of the select committee of the House.

I presume that the reason why the committee did not recommend the expulsion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] is because he is, or is reported to be, sick and absent. On that account I had not proposed to say a word. No man ought to be arraigned and visited with a heavy penalty in his absence and without opportunity to be heard here. [Applause.] I suppose that was the reason why the committee did not make this recommendation and carry out to its logical conclusion the finding of facts in this case, a charge clearly made of corrupt practices upon the part of fellow Members, and equally clearly not supported. Mr. Speaker, I am tired of the degradation of the representatives of the people; I am tired of my own association with that degradation. It has reached a point where simply because a man has been elected by the people of the United States to fill a place upon this floor he becomes "suspect." A man who is a gentleman the day before and the day on which he is elected a Member of Congress becomes "suspect" the day after that. On Monday he is a gentleman, upon Tuesday he is elected a Member of the House of Representatives, and upon Wednesday he is "suspect." Suspect! and becomes an open, palpable, plain victim of yellow journals and self-inter-viewing Members of Congress.

If there be rotten men amongst you, for God's sake find them out and put them out of this House. Purge the House, and if any man dare wantonly, unprovokedly, without cause, with no support of testimony, to break down the very reverence that the American people owe to their own institutions, their respect for their own elected and selected representatives, let the man who does it be visited with the penalty that is due to the crime. It is treason not against the House of Representatives, it is treason against the American people who elect the Members of the House of Representatives.

I am surprised at the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEFFER]. He said that the committee did not find somebody guilty on the charge of the gentleman from Connecticut of "corrupt practices by Members of the House." Why were they not found guilty? Simply because nobody was guilty, so far as the evidence shows. And then the gentleman from Ohio seems to be surprised that a special committee of this House should reflect upon the honor and integrity of the man who made the charge without any proof. Would he like me to arise here and accuse him or anybody else in general language, in interviews and in a hearing before the Committee on Rules, and in a hearing before a special committee, of all sorts of dishonesty, and then decline to furnish the proof? How could he outlive it? Do you not know that a lie travels faster than the truth? The truth may outlive it, travel longer, but the lie travels faster. I am peculiarly susceptible to this sort of argument, because I am the minority leader of this House.

I could have been the sewer of conveyance for all sorts of miserable, unsupported charges against mighty near everybody on the Republican side of this Chamber, from the Speaker down to the whip, because no lack of men will come to the minority leader as the representative of all sorts of opposition to government and organizations, with all sorts of stories about all sorts of men, good, bad and indifferent. Suppose I had really gone into the press? Suppose I had really made charges? Do you realize how long it would have taken a whole lot of the very best men in the opposition ranks to outlive them? Suppose a newspaper man here, or a Member of Congress here, comes out tomorrow and says that the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. SCOTT—I happen to be looking at him, and that is the only reason why I mention him, a man honest and true, and straight, and a gentleman, every inch of him [applause]—suppose a man came out tomorrow and said he was a corporation agent or corporation attorney, or a railroad attorney, or a lobbyist for somebody, God knows what not, and sent me a whole lot of truck to vump upon the press, and suppose I vamped it—it might be a lie, or it might not be; and in this particular supposed case it would be a lie, of course—how long would it take him to live it down? Now, Mr. Speaker, one word more, and I am through, if the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say, as a gentleman, as a man, as a Democrat, as a Representative, that there is no worse form of treason to the American Republic than encouraging the idea that men are corrupt and dishonest merely because they have received the fiat of approval of the American people by election to office. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I have a very high regard for the committee that has made this investigation. Their findings would have great weight either for or against anybody according as they condemned or approved; but when we are asked as Members of the House by this resolution to make those findings our own findings, then, as honest men, we must first look into the testimony ourselves and it is certainly our duty carefully to read the report which they have presented to the House. I can not honestly pronounce such conclusions my own without first studying the case.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS]?

Mr. PAYNE. For a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. PARSONS. A parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be in order to move to postpone consideration?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] yield?

Mr. McCALL. I yield to the gentleman. He desires to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PARSONS. Would it be in order to move to postpone consideration of the resolution until the first Monday in December?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not at this time answer that parliamentary inquiry, because conditions have not yet arisen to make the inquiry in order.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, this report finds a Member of this House guilty of bad faith, of a breach of the privileges of a Member, of making charges which he knew to be false, and also, it seems to me, of perjury, and if we vote these conclusions as our own, then we compel ourselves out of self-respect to expel that Member from the House of Representatives. [Applause.] There is no man here who can vote to make those charges his own and not make it his duty to do all he can to drive that man from our midst. I do not propose to condemn a man upon testimony which I have not read, since the pending resolution makes it necessary for me, if I vote for it, to make the conclusions of the committee my own, I shall have to vote against the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves the previous question.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. PARSONS. I desire to move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until the first Monday in December.

J. A. TAWNEY,
WALTER I. SMITH,
JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill be, and hereby is, agreed to; that the House hereby insists on its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 13, 14, 15, 16, 22, 26, 33, 36, 38, 78, 79, 82, 83, 84, 86, 101, 102, 107, 131, 144, 148, 154, 155, 156, 160, 161, 162, 163, and agrees to the Senate's request for a conference; and that on Senate amendment numbered 9 there be twenty minutes of debate, after which the question shall be taken without further debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that I demand a second.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would this order provide for limiting the time to twenty minutes to be used on a side only?

The SPEAKER. On amendment No. 9 there will be ten minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to suggest to the Chair that the motion is to suspend the rules and to agree to the conference report, and to insist on the House disagreement to the other amendments. Under the rule there is twenty minutes' debate on a side.

The SPEAKER. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then we have the same under the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The order provides that on amendment No. 9 the House shall have an opportunity to vote after twenty minutes' debate, ten minutes on each side. That is the effect of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. It is segregated from the other amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York is a member of the committee and has demanded a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right; let the gentleman from New York be recognized as demanding a second. I did not understand that the Chair was cognizant of the fact that a second had been demanded—I do not care who demanded it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Mississippi did not know that the gentleman from New York had demanded a second. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments added to the sundry civil bill between eleven and twelve million dollars in the aggregate. The conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate have disposed of all of these amendments, with the exception of those enumerated in the rule or the order that is now pending, and as to these amendments we ask that the House further insist upon its disagreement, with the exception of No. 9, and as to that amendment we propose a separate vote in favor of the proposition of further insisting upon the disagreement of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what the amendments are as he goes along?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will. No. 9, on page 11 of the sundry civil bill, as it comes to us from the Senate, is the amendment authorizing the purchase of a block of property at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue at a cost of $3,000,000, to be used as a site for the erection of one or two departmental buildings. It is the same proposition that has been proposed by the Senate at both sessions of the last Congress, and it is the same proposition that the House on a direct vote has rejected heretofore by almost a unanimous vote.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to ask the gentleman if they propose to take the property by condemnation proceedings?

Mr. TAWNEY. They propose to take it by condemnation proceedings or by purchase.

Mr. PAYNE. So that $3,000,000 is not the limit?

Mr. TAWNEY. Three million dollars is not the limit of cost for the site for the buildings. It is also proposed in the public-building bill, as that bill will come to the House, to carry an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the location of a building upon this proposed site, and in addition to that there has been placed upon the public-building bill an appropriation and authority for the purchase of this same site at a cost of at least $3,000,000, the same amount that is carried in this amendment. It is for the purpose of giving the House an opportunity to again express its disapproval of this proposition that I have asked that the opportunity be given for the House to vote separately upon this proposition.

I will call attention to the principal items that are in disagreement. There are a number of items in disagreement that perhaps there will be very little difficulty in reaching a final agreement, because some of them are entirely new propositions, unauthorized by law, or are new legislative propositions which under the rules which govern the conferees, the House proposing them ultimately recedes in the event that the other House insists on its disagreement.

No. 13 is for the construction of a revenue cutter for the coast of Oregon, a proposition that is not authorized by law, and the limit of cost is $250,000.

No. 14 is for a revenue cutter for Narragansett Bay, at a cost of $225,000, which is not authorized by law.

No. 15, on page 19 of the bill, is for a revenue cutter for New York Harbor, at a cost of $90,000, which is not authorized by law. The amendments between Nos. 14 and 36 are of comparatively little consequence.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman said that the revenue cutter for the harbor of New York was not authorized by law, but I wish to suggest that it is absolutely necessary that we should have a good, first-class revenue cutter. For a long time we have not had a proper revenue cutter there that was adequate and sufficient. I speak from experience.

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to the gentleman from New York that we have just turned over to the Light-House Department, at the request of the department, the duty of caring for the anchorage in New York Harbor, and the Light-House Department has plenty of tenders for that purpose.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But this is for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. MANN. This says that it is for anchorage patrol duty, and the Revenue-Cutter Service will not have anything to do with that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law charges the Treasury Department with the enforcement of that act.

Mr. MANN. No; it is the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The act of 1888 expressly puts it under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but so far as the anchorage is concerned, the anchorage buoys and all that has just been turned over to the Light-House Service, and nobody knows what will be required.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will not the revenue cutter provided for in the amendment be used as other revenue cutters are, for the purpose of sending inspectors aboard vessels and doing that work?

Mr. MANN. The item says not; if the gentleman will look at the item in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The next item in disagreement is amendment No. 36, on page 45 of the bill, authorizing the construction of a tender for light-house depot at San Francisco, Cal., at a cost of $15,000. That is not authorized by law. The same is true of amendment 38, authorizing a light-vessel for St. Johns River bar, Florida, for $25,000, which is not authorized by law.

The next is 82, being an addition made to the Geological Survey in the United States of $100,000. Two hundred thousand dollars is the total amount that the Geological Survey has had for the service for the last ten or twelve years, and it is proposed now to increase this appropriation to the extent of 50 per cent, which the House conferees have not agreed to, and, in my judgment, should not agree to. The revenues of the Government do not justify this new service at this time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that the conferees have reduced the Senate amendment of $25,000 for the maintenance, and so forth, of the Hermitage to $5,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; we have not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That amendment was made.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have not reduced the appropriation for the maintenance of the Hermitage at all. We have not given any appropriation for the maintenance of the Hermitage. We have agreed, however, to appropriate $5,000 for the repair of the buildings, the home of Andrew Jackson, and for the improvement of the grounds. There is nothing allowed for maintenance and nothing allowed for investment for future maintenance. In other words, there is no donation to the people who own this home, or the association which owns it, but it is proposed to repair the building which was the home of Andrew Jackson and to improve the grounds within a limit of cost not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. MANN. The building and tomb.

Mr. TAWNEY. We do not say the tomb.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not the language here—

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will turn to the conference report, he will see the exact language.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have read that, but I have not the language of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language in the bill is the language now in the conference report. That is, it is the language that will become the law in the event that the conference report is finally agreed upon and accepted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that this great Government which has not contributed one cent for the purpose of this Hermitage association should contribute no more than $5,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the gentleman thinks—not only thinks, but states as a fact—that in appropriating $5,000 for the repair of the home of Andrew Jackson we are appropriating more than we have ever appropriated toward the care and maintenance of the home of any man who has ever occupied the office of President of the United States. We have never contributed a dollar toward the maintenance of the home of George Washington. We have never contributed a dollar toward the maintenance of the home of Thomas Jefferson, or of any other President of the United States, and we are in this instance doing what we have never done for any other President, by appropriating $5,000 to repair the buildings. Owing to the peculiar financial circumstances of the people who do own the building, the conferees on the part of the House felt constrained to repair the building and defray the expense from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not yield any more of my time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the gentleman does not wish to say the people own it. No people own it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the organization.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They control it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If they are not people, they are an organization. The next item in the disagreement, Mr. Speaker, of any importance is amendment No. 107, for the erection of barracks and quarters, $750,000. Your conferees have resisted this amendment for the reason that when the Bureau Chief was before the Committee on Appropriations we made a careful estimate of how much money would be required to meet the necessities of the service during the next fiscal year, and the amount agreed upon and the amount carried in the bill and adopted by the House was agreed upon with the consent of the Chief of this Bureau; but for some reason that has not yet been explained to the conferees on the part of the House, this amount was increased in the Senate to the extent of $750,000.

The next is amendment No. 154 for the purchase of two steamships of American register for use in the Isthmian Canal Commission, $1,600,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. I wish to ask the gentleman what became of Senate amendment No. 136?

Mr. TAWNEY. Is that for the safe in Alaska?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has gone out.

Mr. SULZER. It ought not to have gone out.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask about the amendment transferring the testing laboratory at the Watertown Arsenal to the Bureau of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Senate has receded from its amendment, and it is in the agreement. Amendment No. 162, the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, is still in disagreement. They propose to appropriate $700,000 for that exposition. Also amendment No. 163, for an international exposition at Albuquerque, N. Mex., which is an irrigation exposition, as near as I can ascertain. They propose to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of aiding the people of Albuquerque to defray the costs of the exposition. I should say, in justice, however, that $25,000 of that is for that purpose, and $25,000 is for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government exhibit, which is not described and is not definite. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no more time.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not the time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to speak in favor of the Senate amendment in the pending sundry civil bill, making an appropriation of $700,000 for the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held in Seattle in 1909, and to urge the House conferees to agree to the same when the bill goes back to conference. The committee of the House has reported favorably a similar measure, which is now on the Calendar. I believe the House is overwhelmingly in favor of this appropriation for this desirable exposition and would vote in favor of the Senate amendment by more than three to one if an opportunity were now offered. It is a worthy project, and commands our earnest support and commendation.

This Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Mr. Speaker, will exhibit not merely the wonderful resources of the States of the Pacific slope, but also the material resources of Alaska, the Yukon territory, British Columbia, the Philippines, and Hawaii. Its object is to demonstrate the progress and the development and the resources of the entire region of the Pacific and to forecast its mighty future possibilities. It means much to us all. The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition is peculiar among enterprises of this character, because it will comprehend not only the resources of the Pacific possessions of this country, but also the Canadian territory of British Columbia and the far-famed Yukon, thus affording the unusual spectacle of two countries under different flags joining forces and uniting in interest in one great exposition.

The Yukon territory and British Columbia, under the Dominion of Canada, are to be as much a part of this exhibition as Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippines, under our own Government, and it is destined to be an exposition expressive of harmony and of good will and of international comity, and speaking much for the continuance of the amicable relations between us and our English-speaking neighbors. It is estimated that 10,000,000 people now live within a radius of 1,000 miles of the section of our country and Canada where this exhibition is to be held, all of whom are directly interested in this exposition and welcome an opportunity to show the material resources and the wealth and the development of their respective sections.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the Pacific and the Great Northwest take a deep interest in this exposition. They intend to make it a success. They are determined to demonstrate the progress they are making in all that tends to the advancement of humanity. They ask the Government for no help. They want no gift. They appeal for no loan. All they ask is that the Government recognize the importance of this exposition, lend its official indorsement to it, take part in it, build its own buildings, and make its own exhibits, and do so at its own expense. The States and the Territories are doing their part. They are all doing what is right. Why should the Government, so deeply interested, lag behind? The Government has aided financially and participated in every exposition of a national character ever held in this country. No Government aid is asked for this exposition—not a dollar is asked for, directly or indirectly—only suitable participation.

The exposition is in the interest of all the people. It will materially benefit all the people. In an educational way it will be a blessing to all the people in a thousand ways. Then why should the Government refuse to take part in this magnificent display of the natural resources of our great Northwest and wonderful Pacific possessions? I can not believe that we shall be so blind to our own best interests as to permit this appropriation to fail. Congress should lend a friendly hand to the enterprising and progressive people on our Pacific borders. They are entitled to it. They are doing a great work that benefits all the people of our country. They have already secured beautiful and suitable grounds for the exposition. It is to be held on the campus of the State University at Seattle. The sum of $432,000 has already been expended in the improvement of the grounds and in the construction of buildings, and many of the structures are already well toward completion. This exposition will bring to the attention of the world the great commercial resources and possibilities of the countries bordering the Pacific and strengthen the friendly and trade relations of the nations on this ocean. As I have already said, the great Yukon territory is to be a part of this exposition. Thus, two nations under two flags will unite in one exposition, something never before known in our day. This exposition will not only tend to strengthen national comity with our English-speaking neighbors on the north, but it will go far to promote harmony and good will with all nations of the Pacific, and especially with the countries of the Orient.

Mr. Speaker, I am a friend of these expositions. All things considered, they cost little and do much good. It is money wisely expended. It benefits all. These expositions are milestones marking great epochs in our onward progress. They diffuse knowledge, educate the people, and exhibit the wonderful resources of our country and the constructive genius of our people. They mean ocular demonstration; they are great object lessons; they are historical and educational and industrial and mechanical and commercial; they mean progress and advancement and enlightenment. They emphasize our greatness and our grandeur and our glory. They illustrate our marvelous growth in every line of human effort, and they demonstrate the giant strides the race is making along every avenue of industry.

Mr. Speaker, the money for the Government buildings and exhibits is to be wisely expended under the provisions of this Senate amendment. One hundred thousand dollars is to enable Alaska to make an exhibit. This is not too much. The wonderful resources of this vast territory are beyond the appreciation of the finite mind, and as yet but little is known. We are only on the threshold of the door of Alaska's greatness. Alaska has already produced over $300,000,000 worth of products. She has paid taxes to the Federal Government of over $11,000,000. She only cost us $7,200,000. Alaska has no power to tax herself to benefit herself. The Federal Government taxes her and absorbs the taxes. She asks $100,000 of this eleven million of her own taxes to exploit her own varied and marvelous resources. This is really her exposition. The Government should listen to her appeal.

The sum of $25,000 is for an Hawaiian exhibit. Hawaii is paying over $1,000,000 annually to the Government. Only a small portion of this sum is spent for her benefit. This insignificant sum of $25,000 should be given to her.

The sum of $25,000 is for the Philippines. This is a small amount to enable these newly acquired islands to show their wonderful material resources. The State of Washington has given for this exposition $1,000,000; the counties in the State, $278,000. The exposition managers asked the people of Seattle to subscribe $500,000. The first day the books were open $625,000 were subscribed. Of this amount every dollar has already been paid. This amount is to be increased to $800,000. The sum of over $2,000,000 is therefore now absolutely provided for by these vigorous, up-to-date, go-ahead, enterprising people. They ask that the Government shall spend only $700,000, and this for its own exhibit and for the exhibits of our Pacific possessions. Is this asking too much? Let the Members of this House answer by an emphatic and an overwhelming vote in favor of the Senate amendment.

Now, just a word in conclusion, as my time is nearly exhausted. I hope that the conferees on the part of the House will agree to the Senate amendment for this exposition. I want to see this exposition a success, I want to do all I can to make it a success. I want the Government to make a creditable exhibition—one worthy of all that we are and all that we hope to be. It will have a beneficial effect on all the people—especially, I hope, on some Members of Congress who at present often exhibit a woeful lack of knowledge concerning the material resources and the greatness and the grandeur and the glory of our Pacific possessions, especially of Alaska and the great Northwest, and enable them to get information through its agency that will aid them in the future to legislate a little more intelligently regarding the wants and the needs and the hopes and the aspirations of the progressive people on the Pacific side of our God-favored land. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN].

Mr. CUSHMAN. I would like to call to the attention of the House and the members of the Appropriations Committee two items in this sundry civil appropriation bill, both of which items are now in conference and not agreed to at this time.

The first is Senate amendment No. 16, on page 9 of this bill. This item, which is not yet agreed to, seeks to appropriate $24,000 for the construction of a wharf and storehouse at Neah Bay, in the State of Washington. What makes this item more important, in my judgment, than anything else is that the wharf and storehouse designed to be constructed under this appropriation are to be used in connection with the ocean-going life-saving tug, which tug we appropriated for some two years ago. In my judgment, it is most important that we have this appropriation to build the wharf at that point, because without the necessary wharf it will be difficult, if not impossible, to properly use this tug. The rugged character of the coast and shore line at that point tend to make the tug very nearly useless without the necessary wharf—

Mr. TAWNEY. The tug is not there. The tug has not yet started for the Pacific Ocean, and there will be no use for a dock until next year, and the dock can be constructed by the time the tug gets there. That is the reason we have not agreed to it. There will be no trouble about building the dock ultimately. It is only a question of whether it should be built before it is needed or not.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] say that. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington has two minutes remaining.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word about Senate amendment number 162 in this sundry civil bill, which is one of the items yet in dispute between the Senate and House conferees. This is the item that relates to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, which is to be held in the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, in the summer of 1909. It is worse than useless for me to attempt in this little time to try to make any adequate statement regarding this great matter. The Senate amendment provides for the appropriation of $700,000 in relation to this great exposition. When I say I hope the conferees will agree to this item, I speak for not only myself and my two colleagues in this House, but for the great body of the people in the State of Washington, who are preparing to make this one of the greatest expositions ever held in America. In this connection I wish to emphasize two things: First, the Government of the United States will never be called upon to loan any money to this exposition or to make good any deficit. That is provided for in the amendment itself, and is backed up by our people at home, who propose not only to make this exposition a success, but further than that to make their word good in relation to it.

Second, I wish to emphasize the fact that the people who are behind this great exposition are not asking or expecting the United States Government to finance it. I firmly believe that there has never been held an exposition in the United States where the people have furnished so much in proportion to what they ask of the Government as in this instance. There will be spent, in my judgment, on the shores of Puget Sound on that great exposition by the people not less than $10,000,000. That great contribution represents the people; it represents the private enterprise of that region. That represents what the people themselves will do to make this exposition a success. In return they ask the United States Government to contribute the small sum of $700,000. They do not ask the Government for this $700,000 to finance the exposition, but merely that this amount be appropriated to cover the expense of the Government exhibit at that fair, and also that out of this amount may be set aside a sum to enable Alaska to make her exhibit, to enable Hawaii to make her exhibit, and to enable the Philippine Islands to make their exhibit. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment to this bill that I am very earnestly interested in and of much importance to the people I represent. But I think that the rule that has just been proposed for the agreement to this conference report in part and disagreement to other parts shows the absurdity of this House attempting to legislate under the present Republican organization of the House. It is supposed that a conference is appointed for the purpose of attempting to reach an agreement between the two Houses that shall be ratified by the Houses after they shall have reached an agreement. But the conference committee, in this instance, come before the House with a bill containing 163 Senate amendments. To these Senate amendments they propose to agree in toto except 29, but 29 of these Senate amendments they propose to disagree to.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have reached an agreement on all but 29. We do not yield to the Senate on all of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I intended to say.

Mr. MANN. That is very different from what the gentleman did say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not mean that the House has lain down on all the amendments. I know it is customary for the House conferees to lie down on most amendments, and it has been for a number of years, but I did not intend to say that they had lain down on them all. But what I meant to say was that the House and the Senate have agreed to all but twenty-nine of these amendments, and the other twenty-nine may want to disagree to them. Now, it has been customary for the conferees on a conference report, when they could not agree to an amendment, to bring the matter before the House and to submit the question as to whether the House would agree to the Senate amendments before they acted in reference to the matter. But the way this conference report is presented to the House to-day it is absolutely impossible for any man on the floor of the House to vote intelligently as to whether he will agree or disagree to these twenty-nine Senate amendments that are now in dispute. He may be in favor of one, he may be opposed to the others, but the conferees through this rule expect us to vote all up or all down, or to disagree to them all or agree to them all. More than that, under these rules they pick out these special amendments that they are interested in the House voting on, and decline to give the membership of this House the opportunity to vote on those amendments that the House itself has insisted on.

Now, there is an amendment here, No. 83, to the sundry civil bill that is of vast importance to a very large number of people in the United States. It is not a question involving money. There is no dispute between the two Houses as to the amount of money that shall be expended, but it is a difference in reference to procedure.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman refer to the provision that is to authorize the Geological Survey to test the coal of Alabama, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and other States, owned by private individuals?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I refer to that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is what I thought.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will ask now the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], if he has this bill, to please read the language of the amendment with reference to the Hermitage, if the gentleman will accommodate me.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have not the language before me. The amendment, as agreed to, gives $5,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course I have read everything in the Record, and so forth. I do not know whether you make it payable to the governor of the State or the Ladies' Hermitage Association, or what.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not payable to anybody. It is payable for repairs—

Mr. TAWNEY. Repairs to be made by the proper department of the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman, the House committee reported $30,000 and the Senate committee $25,000 for this undertaking; that is, to aid the Ladies' Hermitage Association to care for the Hermitage. The State of Tennessee has spent about $165,000 on this Hermitage farm—500 acres—and the Ladies' Hermitage Association has spent about $28,000, to buy and preserve what is known as the "Hermitage," the home of Andrew Jackson, situated in 25 acres of the land controlled by the association. The Government of the United States has never paid one cent toward this patriotic undertaking. From the time Andrew Jackson was 13 years old down until he died he was a public factor—both a State and national benefactor in war and peace.

From the time he was 13 he was a soldier, was wounded; and two of his brothers died in the war of the Revolution. Their graves are unknown, and the burial place of the mother is unknown. His father is buried somewhere in a graveyard in North Carolina, but they do not know exactly the spot where he is buried.

So, laying aside the public services of Jackson to the State and the United States, there is some reason why we should take care of the Hermitage and tomb of Jackson, and, I think, Mr. Speaker, with all sincerity—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield two minutes more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do think, in all sincerity, for the great American Congress, representing nearly 90,000,000 of people, a Government that Jackson fought for from the time he was 13 until old age and disease took him away, to make this appropriation of $5,000 is an act that is not creditable to Congress, and I deeply regret the fact, and say so. I am almost tempted to say—

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is aware, I suppose, that the Senate amendment only contemplated the appropriation of $25,000, of which $20,000 was to be invested in bonds?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that under this amendment all the money that will be expended is appropriated?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This appropriates as much money as the Senate amendment, or as far as the present expenditure of money is concerned.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Why is not the gentleman just as well off under this as he would be under the Senate amendment, with the opportunity afforded hereafter of getting more than the amount of the $20,000 investment in bonds would be every year? And if he stays in Congress I think undoubtedly he will secure every year a larger sum of money.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for speaking as kindly as he does of this proposition, and thank him for what he says of me. I am not here begging, nor is anybody else begging; it is something that the Federal Government has not done and should take a pride in doing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I can not believe that future Congresses will, if it is necessary, agree that $5,000 is the limit that the American Congress has of love and respect for Jackson. It can not be weighed or measured in dollars and cents, of course, but $5,000 to be given by this great Government, when Tennessee and her people have spent about $180,000, is a matter that I can not exactly reconcile. I am not prepared right now—

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit an interruption?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have only a minute.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think the American people measure their love and respect for their Presidents in dollars and cents?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No, indeed; but we ought to show—

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the effect of your statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We ought to sufficiently show in a practical way that we really have that proper regard that they should have. But, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, Congress can complete its offering at a future day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there were in disagreement between the two Houses 163 amendments. The conferees have reached an agreement upon 134. There are still 29 amendments upon which no agreement has been reached. They involve expenditures of $7,100,000. While I have no sympathy with the method by which the House is asked to adopt the report, yet I do believe that the report should be agreed to, and that the House should further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments upon which an agreement has not been reached.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has four minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield that, and any other time that remains, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, just a word on the amendment to appropriate $3,000,000 to purchase a site for a Department building on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue in this city. I hope the House will insist on its opposition to that item for two reasons: First, because it does not belong to this bill, and, secondly, because the same matter will come up and be thrashed out in connection with the public buildings bill. I do not care at this time to express an opinion upon the merits of the proposition. I hope the House will instruct the committee to insist upon its disagreement to that amendment for the additional reason that if there was no public buildings bill pending at this time and there was a great public emergency there might be a justification for putting this item on the sundry civil bill; but under the circumstances, since the matter is bound to come up in connection with the other bill, I hope the House will unanimously vote to instruct its conferees to insist on its opposition.

Mr. MANN. Why not vote on the merits now? It will help.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Olcott). The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yeas and nays!

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 173, nays 80, answered "present" 12, not voting 122, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLCOTT). Under the order the Clerk will read Senate amendment No. 9, upon which there are twenty minutes' debate; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is entitled to ten minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to ten minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

9. Land for buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the whole of square Nos. 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, in the city of Washington, and toward the erection of one or two buildings thereon, $3,000,000. That part of C street, Ohio avenue, D street, and E street lying between the squares named herein is hereby made a part of the site authorized by this provision. That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stats. L., vol. 20, ch. 837).

That a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, which is hereby created, shall report to Congress preliminary plans and an estimate of cost for one or two buildings to be erected on said site for the use of the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, and for other governmental purposes, said preliminary plans and estimate of cost to be paid for out of the appropriation herein made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the House just a minute to state the proposition. This is the item, amendment number 9, to which I called attention in presenting the conference report. It involves the appropriation of $3,000,000 for the purchase of a site for departmental buildings at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue upon which is now located the Regent Hotel, Chase's Theater, and a number of other buildings in the block back of that toward the Mall. I do not care to discuss the merits of the proposition at this time. This House has twice practically, by unanimous consent, voted to reject this proposition, and a vote in favor of the motion to further insist upon our disagreement is a negative vote on the purchase of this proposed site. I will now yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri opening the discussion upon the order gives as a reason for voting for the motion which is against the appropriation the fact that this same item was in the public building bill as a Senate amendment. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of this House will vote according to their sentiments upon the merits of this proposition, if they are going to vote against it, and not merely vote against it because it happens to be in this bill in order to fight the same thing in the other bill. If the House is opposed to this proposition at this time, let us say so upon its merits now and have no further dispute about it with the Senate.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that in the public buildings bill a provision has been made in line with this Senate amendment, and I hope, and I dare even to express the hope, that the House of Representatives may prove itself not altogether absolutely impotent in conference, but that the House conferees may vote against this proposition; and I hope they will vote against it upon its merit, or rather upon its demerits, because I accept the challenge of the gentleman from Illinois upon that question. I do not see any reason why at this particular time the Government of the United States should pay $3,000,000 for the Regent Hotel and for this theater.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from Mississippi understand me to favor the $3,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did.

Mr. ROBINSON. So did I.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. [Laughter.] I said I favored the motion, which was to disagree to the Senate amendment, and I favored the motion to disagree on the merits of the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if I had not been so deaf physically, or so stupid mentally, one or the other, I do not know which, as to misunderstand the gentleman from Illinois, I would not have made this speech at all. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois, as he explains himself, absolutely. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota, and I think the House conferees ought to stand for the House upon this proposition. And, by the way, while I am talking about that, Mr. Speaker, I am tired of the House giving way to the Senate on everything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the House of Representatives has been made utterly ridiculous and absolutely impotent as a branch of the legislative power of the Federal Government. I know that that has occurred as a result of special rules that have been adopted by the House, in which the House has virtually confessed that the minority controls the House and that the majority can not control it with intelligent regard in its rules to the public business and the public welfare. It affords me so much pleasure, therefore, to stand with the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Illinois, now and then, upon a proposition that is made intelligible to the House by subsequent explanation and which has been finally comprehended by the House, that I do not know how sufficiently to thank the Republican majority for the opportunity that is given me to express my desire and accord with the gentleman from Illinois, so badly misunderstood a moment ago, and the gentleman from Minnesota, not because of any lack of explicit statement by either, but because of the lack of complete understanding by me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is extremely modest—much more than he deserves to be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to explain the situation to this side of the House. The Senate has put on an amendment appropriating $3,000,000 to buy several parcels of land on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, and the $3,000,000 are appropriated not only for the purchase of the ground, but to be applied to the erection of one or two public buildings. Nobody knows what the land will cost. No buildings have been authorized. If this land is to be bought, it should be authorized in a definite and proper way. I do not think that at this time we should purchase in the District any large tracts of land for public buildings. The motion before the House is to further insist on disagreeing to the Senate amendment, and I hope this side of the House, in order to emphasize the position of the House, will vote "aye" on this motion.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the House conferees will adhere to the last to their disagreement on Senate amendments 101 and 102. Amendment 101 provides for an extensive and elaborate survey of Galveston Harbor and vicinity.

Amendment No. 102 provides for the diversion of a certain amount of the appropriation for that part of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and Minneapolis to the repairing of a levee on the west bank. Both of these items belong in a river and harbor bill, and it is a fact, which three score Members of this House know, that surveys have been refused at this session. To allow such an amendment as this would be to make of the sundry civil bill a river and harbor bill.

The adoption of either of these amendments would be a decided interference with the prerogatives of this House. Had either of them been proposed here at the time the sundry civil bill was under consideration, a point of order would have been immediately sustained. In order that we may have legislation on rivers and harbors that is fair to both Houses and judicious for the country, the rule should be the same in both Houses. I submit there could be no worse tendency than to allow these items to be taken up by another committee, and that committee not a committee of the House, but the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. I want to say further that the second item is one of a class that has been considered by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors many times and has been rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman's objection to be that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House is set aside in regard to this matter, upon the merits of which he differs—

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Not set aside. It is as if a question belonging to the Committee on Foreign Affairs should be reported upon by the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; and he reinforces that objection by the remark he has just made. I want to ask him what the distinction is between the case he is now presenting to the House and the case he the other day presented to the House. The other day, I believe, he advocated setting aside the Committee on—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I will ask for further time as I do not think the question is of sufficient importance to justify my asking an extension.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I ask of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] time enough to complete the question and to receive a reply from the gentleman from Ohio, if he wishes to give it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Minnesota has only two minutes remaining and I would like to say something myself on that matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then in view of the fact that the House is to be enlightened later on, by promise at any rate, by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] I shall not insist on the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words, to say that I am in favor of the House concurring in Senate amendment No. 9, now before the conferees, authorizing the Government to acquire the land mentioned for suitable buildings for the Departments of State and Justice and Commerce and Labor. It is high time this was done. These great Departments of the Government should be suitably housed and housed in proper buildings of their own. The Government pays every year hundreds of thousands of dollars for rent for offices for governmental officials in the District of Columbia. The saving of this great rent expense for a few years would total the cost of the purchase of the land and the construction of the necessary buildings now contemplated. We should do this now, and it will be wise economy in the end.

The conferees on the part of the House in their parsimonious attitude to this commendable project seem to be penny wise and pound foolish. Sooner or later this land must be acquired. It can be purchased cheaper now than hereafter. Sooner or later these buildings must be erected. It strikes me that now is the best time to do it. The longer we wait the more it is going to cost. It is real economy to do it now.

The House passed a day or so ago an omnibus public-buildings bill carrying between twenty and thirty millions of dollars for Government buildings in the States. Much of this money will be spent at way cross stations. Much of it was entirely unnecessary. Much of it could be saved. Much of it will be squandered. I am glad to say I did not vote for the bill. Much of the vast sum carried in that bill could be saved, if we legislated for the best interests of all the people, and could be spent for necessary Government buildings in the District of Columbia.

The Government is paying too much rent to-day for office room to owners of private property in Washington. We should stop it. The Government should erect and own suitable buildings for all its officials in the capital. I believe it to be the wisest policy, and I know it will be economy in the long run. The Department of State should have a home of its own. The Department of Justice should have a temple that will be a credit to all the people, and an object of beauty forever to the capital. The Department of Commerce and Labor should be housed in a suitable Government building. I trust the day is not far distant when the Government will own all the property on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue from the White House to the Capitol grounds, and build on it great and enduring and magnificent public buildings that will be a credit to the Government, that will command the admiration of the people, and that will go far to make Washington the glorious capital it is destined to be—the greatest and the grandest and the most beautiful city in all the world.

These buildings should be up to date, sanitary, fireproof, and as beautiful in an artistic sense as the constructive genius of America can make them. Let me call the attention of the House to one department of the Government—the Geological Survey. It is cramped and crowded in dingy, unsuitable, private-owned buildings—unsafe, unsanitary, and far from being fireproof. The Government has spent millions of dollars to get the data and gather the information now stored and filed in this Department. Its loss would be a catastrophe—a national calamity—and all this invaluable material is stored in an old rat-trap of a building, wholly unsuited for the purpose, that is liable to take fire and burn down any day or any night; and if all this information, and all this data, all these priceless records, and all the work of years and years of human effort, at the cost of millions of dollars, should be destroyed by fire, the loss would be incalculable and the material of years of industry could never be replaced.

The very contemplation of delay in a matter so important as this is criminal. This great Geological Department should have a fireproof building for its home and to safeguard its priceless work. I want to see this appropriation go through, and I do not care what bill carries it through. I am now, always have been, and always will be a friend of wise economy in the expenditure of the people's money, but I have no sympathy with the economy, or rather parsimony, proclaimed by the conferees of the House in their policy of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel, and all to the detriment of the public welfare. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I should regard this amendment with more favor than I feel it ought to be regarded at this time. Some day, in a proper way, I hope to see Congress adopt a scheme that will make of Pennsylvania avenue the greatest thoroughfare in the world, but I believe that should be done, not by putting the buildings, as is suggested here, upon the south side, but by extending the Mall to Pennsylvania avenue, and then place your buildings on the north side, facing the Mall, and have a street that will outrival the Ringstrasse of Vienna or Prince's street in Edinburgh, "the noblest street of Europe." But the proposition that the House is confronted with now is whether we should appropriate $3,000,000 in furtherance of an undigested plan, one not fully considered, put on an appropriation bill in the closing days of Congress and at a time when we are likely to have a deficiency in the public revenues. To my mind the voting of such an expenditure upon the slight consideration that is possible to this House at this time would be the doing of not only a very unwise and unjustifiable thing, but would amount to a disregard of our plain duty. This House ought to insist that matters of this kind are not to be rushed through at the ninth hour by the Senate putting them upon appropriation bills with the idea that, inasmuch as the appropriation bills must be passed, therefore the House can be whipped into receding from its position. If this had been offered or brought in by the Committee on Appropriations of this House it would have been subject to the point of order. If it had been offered by any Member upon this floor it would have been subject to the point of order, and, to my mind, for the House to surrender now is simply to encourage legislation of the most extravagant character. If we could have an analysis made of the expenditures of this Government it would be surprising to see the amount that is added by the other branch and to see how much is put on in the closing days of Congress. The House of Representatives was expected to be the guardian of the Treasury of the country.

I speak for no parsimonious policy, but I do believe that this House will never rise to its full dignity, will never occupy that place of importance in the country's affairs or in the judgment of the people that was contemplated by the makers of the Constitution until it asserts, and emphatically asserts, its right to control the great appropriation bills and the other bills spending the money of the nation [applause], and we can not do it any too soon, and I hope that the vote of every Member will be an affirmative vote to insist upon the disagreement to the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] a few moments ago spoke about the parsimonious way in which we have treated the city of Washington, or the District of Columbia, in the public buildings bill, and I want to call to his attention and to the attention of the House the fact that the city of Washington, or the District of Columbia, during the last six or eight years has received a great deal more than its proportionate share of the money expended for public buildings throughout the States. We have expended, and are now expending, in the construction of public buildings, more than $12,000,000 in this city. No one can complain, therefore, that the Congress of the United States is discriminating against the city of Washington in favor of the rest of the country.

I believe that the time is coming when the Government should provide more room, more departmental buildings for the transaction of the public business, but I submit that this is no time for us to consider a proposition that has not the support of any testimony in regard to the terms and conditions under which this property is now held, or in regard to the value of the property that it is proposed to buy. A proposition like this has never been presented to the House of Representatives except as an amendment coming to the House from the Senate, and I trust that the House on this occasion will, as it has on two previous occasions, vote unanimously to further insist upon its disagreement to this Senate amendment, and I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now further insist upon its disagreeing vote to Senate amendment No. 9. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 9.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 229, nays 2, answered "present" 10, not voting 146, as follows:

EXTENSION OF RAILWAY LINES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made in the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask to have the statement read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the House insert the following:

"That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a double-track connection with its tracks on E street south, thence northwardly along First street east to East Capitol street, there to connect with the tracks of the Washington Railway and Electric Company; also a double-track extension from Delaware avenue and C street northeastwardly along Delaware avenue to the plaza in front of the Union Station, together with a double-track loop located as near as may be to the exterior circumference of said plaza and passing in front of and near to the Union Station; also a double-track connection with existing tracks on G street near New Jersey avenue NW. and thence eastwardly to and along Massachusetts avenue, with such northerly deviations as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance of the Union Station, to junctions with an existing track at Third and D streets NE. and at the northwest corner of Stanton square.

"SEC. 2. That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend its double tracks on North Capitol street southwardly from the intersection of G street to Massachusetts avenue, there to connect with the tracks hereinbefore authorized on Massachusetts avenue.

"SEC. 3. That the Capital Traction Company of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to construct and extend, by double tracks, the lines of its underground electric railroad from Florida avenue and Seventh street NW. southeastwardly along Florida avenue to its intersection with Eighth street east, thence southwardly along Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue, there to connect with existing tracks of the Capital Traction Company; also a double-track extension from the tracks hereinbefore authorized on Florida avenue southeastwardly along New Jersey avenue to its intersection with Massachusetts avenue and First street west, thence along said Massachusetts avenue southeastwardly to the said plaza, and with such northerly deviations as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance of the Union Station, thence by such route as may be determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the corner of Second and F streets NE., thence east on F street north to Eight street east to connect with the tracks of the Capital Traction Company hereinbefore authorized; also a double-track extension of its lines from Seventh and T streets NW. eastwardly along T street to Florida avenue to connect with the tracks of the Capital Traction Company hereinbefore authorized; also a double-track extension of its lines from C street and Delaware avenue NE. along Delaware avenue to the plaza in front of the Union Station, together with a double-track loop passing in front of the station on said plaza; also a double-track connection from First and B streets SE. northwardly along First street east to B street north.

"SEC. 4. That the companies hereinbefore named be, and they are hereby, permitted to lay duct lines on such streets as may be necessary for the proper operation of their lines, the location of such duct lines to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the cost thereof and all the other costs and expenses of construction, removal of tracks, repairs, and restoration in this act mentioned shall be borne and paid solely by said street railway companies, and they shall be solely liable for all damages to persons and property occasioned by any construction or work authorized by this act.

"SEC. 5. That the said street railway companies mentioned in this act be, and they are hereby, authorized and required, within eighteen months from the date of the passage of this act, and it shall be the duty of each of them, to remove their respective railway tracks and appurtenances from the following streets, and at the time of their removal to repair, restore, and make good in all respects the space now occupied by said railway tracks and appurtenances to the satisfaction and written approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, namely: G street NW., from North Capitol street to New Jersey avenue; C street north, from First street east to Fourth street east; D street north, from First street east to Massachusetts avenue; First street west, from C street north to G street north; Sixth street west, from Louisiana avenue to B street north, and Louisiana avenue, from Fifth street west to Sixth street west; and upon neglect or refusal of said companies to remove their respective tracks and to repave, repair, restore, and make good said space to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners within the time above limited, any said street railway company so neglecting or refusing shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to the penalty provided in section 710 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia regarding the removal of abandoned tracks, and said Commissioners are authorized, without notice, to remove said tracks and to repave the space occupied by same and charge the cost thereof to such railroad company, whatever may be the manner or cost of doing said work, and to collect the cost thereof in the manner provided in section 5 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878.

"Sec. 6. That the construction of the underground electric street railway lines in this act hereinbefore mentioned shall be commenced within thirty days and completed on or before May 1, 1909; and in default of such commencement or completion within said time or within the extension of time by this section specified, all corporate rights, franchises, and privileges of any street railway company so in default shall immediately cease and determine: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, for good cause shown in writing, extend the time for completion; but the said Commissioners shall in no case grant such extension for a longer period than six months.

"Sec. 7. That where the route or routes provided for in this act coincide with each other or with the route or routes of existing street railways or street railways hereafter authorized to be operated or constructed, one set of double tracks only shall be constructed and shall be used in common, upon terms mutually agreed upon, or, in case of disagreement, upon terms determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which is authorized and directed to give notice and hearings to the interested parties and to fix and finally determine the terms of the joint trackage: Provided, That there shall be two sets of double tracks immediately in front of the main entrance to the Union Station, facing Massachusetts avenue, the most northerly rail being not less than seventy feet from the axis of the south portion of said station.

"Sec. 8. That authority is hereby given the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to use such portions of reservation No. 77 as may in their judgment be necessary for sidewalks and roadways and for street railway use. And authority is hereby given said Commissioners to acquire by purchase or to condemn, in accordance with existing law, for street purposes, so much of square No. 626, lying north of the north building line of square No. 567, extended, as they may deem necessary, and the cost of acquiring said property as above shall be paid by the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company: Provided, That where a portion of any lot is authorized to be acquired as above the said Commissioners may, in their discretion, acquire the entire lot; the portion thereof, when so acquired, lying south of the north building line of square No. 567, extended, to become the property of said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company as soon as the entire cost of acquisition as above specified shall be paid by it.

"Sec. 9. That whenever, in the construction of the new tracks herein authorized, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia deem it necessary, in order to reasonably accommodate vehicular traffic, to widen the roadway of any street or streets in which said track or tracks are to be laid, such widening shall be done by said Commissioners, the cost and expense of such widening, including the laying of new sidewalks, the adjustment of all underground construction, and of every public apportionment, shall be borne by the railway company constructing such tracks, and the said railway company shall deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in advance the estimated cost of changing or widening the said street or streets, the work to be done by said Commissioners; and whenever, at any future time, the Commissioners deem it necessary to widen the roadway of any street or streets occupied by the extensions herein authorized, said railway company shall bear one-half the cost of widening and improving such street or streets, to be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying or repairing pavement lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of said street railroad, and for a distance of two feet exterior to such track or tracks is collectible, under the provisions of section 5 of an act entitled 'An act to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia,' approved June 11, 1878.

"Sec. 10. That whenever in the construction of any of the tracks herein authorized it is necessary, in the opinion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to improve, by paving or otherwise, the roadway of any street occupied by such track or tracks, said company shall adjust the grade of its tracks to the new grade of the street or streets, the cost thereof to be borne by the said company in the same manner as the cost of paving between the exterior of the tracks of the street railroad companies as referred to in the preceding section.

"Sec. 11. That the arrangement of all tracks herein authorized within the lines of the plaza in front of the Union Station shall be in accordance with the plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and all work of construction and extension herein authorized shall be executed in accordance with plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and under a permit or permits from said Commissioners.

"Sec. 12. That existing transfer arrangements between the Washington Railway and Electric Company and the Metropolitan Coach Company, a corporation of the District of Columbia, shall not be terminated, except by authority of Congress; and unless said Metropolitan Coach Company shall, within one year after the passage of this act, substitute motor vehicles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the herxies now used by it, its right to operate its line shall cease and determine: Provided further, That all transfers issued by the Metropolitan Coach Company shall be properly dated and punched as to time limit as provided by rules and regulations to be made, altered, and amended from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that unless said transfers are so dated and punched the Washington Railway and Electric Company shall not be required to receive them.

"Sec. 13. That the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company and the Capital Traction Company be, and they are hereby, authorized and required, jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate, by overhead trolley, temporary railway tracks for passenger service from the Union Station to the intersection of Delaware avenue and C street north, said tracks to be constructed within sixty days from the date of the approval of this act, in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said tracks to be maintained by said companies to the satisfaction of said Commissioners, and to be removed by said companies after the construction of the permanent street railway tracks herein provided for within thirty days after notice from said Commissioners so to do: Provided, That the companies herein named may, at their option, substitute permanent underground for temporary overhead construction on Delaware avenue from C street to the southern edge of the plaza, and thence by temporary underground construction to the north line of Massachusetts avenue; such temporary construction to be removed within thirty days from the date of operation of cars over the permanent construction provided for in section 1 of this act.

"Sec. 14. That the railway companies affected by this act shall have, over and respecting the routes herein provided for, the same rights, powers, and privileges as they respectively have or hereafter may have by law over and respecting their other routes, and shall be subject in respect thereto to all the other provisions of their charters and of law.

"Sec. 15. That no transfer ticket or written or printed instrument giving or purporting to give the right of transfer to any person or persons from a public conveyance operated upon one line or route of a street railroad, or from one car to another car upon the line of any street railroad, shall be issued, sold, or given except to a passenger lawfully entitled thereto. Any person who shall issue, sell, or give away such a transfer ticket or instrument as aforesaid to a person or persons not lawfully entitled thereto, and any person or persons not lawfully entitled thereto who shall receive and use or offer for passage any such transfer ticket or instrument to another with intent to have such transfer ticket used or offered for passage shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars.

"Sec. 16. That every street railroad company or corporation owning, controlling, leasing, or operating one or more street railroads within the District of Columbia shall on each and all of its railroads supply and operate a sufficient number of cars, clean, sanitary, in good repair, with proper and safe power, equipment, appliances, and service, comfortable and convenient, and so operate the same as to give expeditious passage, not to exceed fifteen miles per hour within the city limits or twenty miles per hour in the suburbs, to all persons desirous of the use of said cars, without crowding said cars. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby given power to require and compel obedience to all of the provisions of this section, and to make, alter, amend, and enforce all needful rules and regulations to secure said obedience; and said Commission is given power to make all such orders and regulations necessary to the exercise of the powers herein granted to it as may be reasonable and proper; and such railroad companies or corporations, their officers and employees, are hereby required to obey all the provisions of this section, and such regulations and orders as may be made by said Commission. Any such company or corporation, or its officers or employees, violating any provision of this section, or any of the said orders or regulations made by said Commission, or permitting such violation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars. And each day of failure or neglect on the part of such company or corporation, its officers or employees, to obey each and all of the provisions and requirements of this section, or the orders and regulations of the Commission made thereunder, shall be regarded as a separate offense.

"Sec. 17. That prosecutions for violations of any of the provisions of this act shall be on information of the Interstate Commerce Commission filed in the police court by or on behalf of the Commission.
